The ubiquitous and pestiferous tout is a menace to the turf and should be suppressed. Some of the running tracks employ special officers to look after persons of his class, and they have become known among race goers as tout-bouncers. These officers are selected on account of their special fitness for the discharge of the duties assigned to them, and it is said they can spot a tout at a great distance. When found and caught he is put over the fence and out without ceremony. The trotting tracks would do well to adopt a similar plan to the end that the ring may be kept clear of the light-fingered gentry, for it is no secret that touts combine with their profession the art of pocket picking and diamond pin snatching. The detective should of course wear citizens' clothes, and have some knowledge of the fraternity. It is comparatively an easy matter to dodge a uniformed officer. Complaints of the doings of touts and pickpockets were heard on many of the principal tracks during the season, and one of them was landed in jail at Lexington for swiping a valuable pin and a few coins of the realm. The Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' Association is to be congratulated upon the promptness with which the fellow was put behind the bars, but it would have been better for all concerned had he fallen under the regime of the police some hours before the act for which he was arrested. All touts should be in jail, or anywhere except on a race track. There was a swarm of them at Oakley and Terre Haute, and it is said the same gang operated extensively at Detroit, Cleveland and Columbus notwithstanding the employment of the usual precautions to suppress them. Nothing short of heroic treatment will eliminate the evil.

Low Prices for Broodmares.

The sale of stallions and broodmares from the breeding farm of Mr. J. Naglee Burk of Santa Clara county was held last Tuesday evening at the Occidental Horse Exchange. The prices were not up to expectations, the star of the sale, imported Janet N., dam of Crescendo and Bellicoso, bringing but $1000 at which price she was knocked down to Charles Fair. The summary of the sale is as follows:

Brioso, ch b, T. Jones, $70; Drum Major, ch b, George Horner, $65; Intrepido, b c, R. Hughes, $70; Eroica, b m, Dan McCarthy, $70; Entrata, ch m, Lew Blasingame, $35; Cadenza, ch m, Lew Blasingame, $75; Feroce, cb m, Dan McCarthy, $55; Gravita, b m, W. C. de B. Lopez, $175; Why Not, ch m, T. Jones, $50; Vedette, b m, W. Sanfield, $25; Imp. Janet N., ch m, Charles L. Fair, $1000; Flame, h m, D. One of England's best bred young thoroughbred stallions has just arrived in America on the steamer Minnehaha. It is the three year old chestnut colt Star Shoot, by Isinglass out of Astrology by Hermit. He was purchased through John Hanning for Clay & Woodford, of Paris, Ky. and next spring will be devoted to stud duties. As a two year old Star Shoot, running in the name of Captain Eustace Loder, won these races: The British Dominion Two Year Old Stake of $4570, the Hunt Park Foal Stakes of $5675, and ran a dead heat in the National Breeders' Produce Stakes of $23,475, the other dead heater being Ian. L. Reiff rode Star Shoot and Tod Sloan rode Ian. In the Middle Park Plate Star Shoot was beaten a neck and a head by Floriform and Orchid. John Huggins trained Star Shoot, who, as a stable companion of Volodyovski, enjoyed a high private reputation for a time this year, and at one time was spoken of as a Derby possibility. He had been entered for that race by Captain Loder, nearly all of whose horses in due time were leased to Mr. Whitney, whose other entry, Volodyovski, won the Derby, Star Shoot not starting.

The Breeders' Protective Association, which buys up old and cheap broodmares at thoroughbred sales and sells them South as work horses without pedigrees, was active at the recent thoroughbred sales. The association secured forty-one of the 149 head offered for $1125, an average of a little less than $27.50. As high as $100 was paid for a mare by imp. Kantaka and $94 for a Longfellow mare. A daughter of Bend 'Or went to the association for $25, and Belle Broeck, the grandam of the two year old Heno, went for $15. Many mares were bought for $5 and will probably sell for as much as work horses as they brought in the ring with their full pedigrees.

EASTERN NOTES AND NEWS.

It is reported that John Splan brought Henrietta 2:12½ for a Russian gentleman.

Thomas W. Lawson has booked twenty mares to Red Chute, sire of Oxford Boy 2:20.

Six steamers are ready in New Orleans to carry horses to Africa for the British army.

Gus Macey, the well-known horseman and trainer, has just been elected Mayor of Versailles, Kentucky.

Peter Stirling 2:11½ and Hawthorne 2:11 are the only three year old trotters that have beaten 2:14 this year.

At Lexington the other day Hattie Smith, a two year-old filly by Hinder Wilkes, worked a mile in 2:16½.

Ed. Andrews, of Sardinia, N. Y., has signed a contract to train the horses of a wealthy gentleman of Vienna, Austria.

June 2:08½ was sold under the hammer as a yearling for $62, was sent to a Western ranch and raised three foals before her speed was developed.

Although there were but eleven new trotters for the 2:10 list this year an even forty stepped into the 2:10 list for pacers in the same length of time.

Among the many broken down horses that have "fully recovered," according to announcement, and will be campaigned again next year is Charley Hayt 2:06.

Though Major Muscovite did not reduce his record of 2:07½ the past season, he was separately timed in 2:05½ at Terre Haute in the heat won by Harold H. in 2:04.

The pacing stallion Kassell 2:09½, by Dunton Wilkes, died in Iowa recently. He was the sire of Fred The Kid 2:08½, and other fast ones, and was himself a good race horse this season.

The New York Horse Show plays no favorites, W. K. Vanderbilt's horses in the class for carriage pairs were ordered out of the ring, the off horse being lame and not in condition to show.

R. C. Estill, of Lexington, Ky., owns Paronella, dam of Country J. 2:10½, and has a very fast yearling out of her by Red Chute 2:24½. He is called Parachute and has trotted a quarter in 37 seconds.

The Overland Racing Association at Denver are laying their plans for a more pretentious harness meeting next spring than they ever held. They will offer more money and present features new to Colorado.

A prominent scientist states that if a horse is given what water he will drink he will live 25 days without food; he will live 17 days without either food or drink, and only five days with food and deprived of water.

Summarized, Alix's turf record is as follows: Winner of heats in 2:30, 45; heats in 2:15, 35; heats in 2:10, 17; as a two year old she took a record of 2:30; at three of 2:16½; at four of 2:10; at five of 2:07½, and at six of 2:03½.

Wolf teeth in horses are not, as is the common belief, detrimental to the eye sight of horses, but as they serve no useful purpose they should be removed with forceps if they interfere with the well being of the animal.

D. P. Simpson, a horse buyer in northwestern Kansas, has adopted a new plan of buying horses. He pays so much a pound. Good drivers are quoted at 11 cents per pound, farm horses ten cents and ordinary plugs 5 cents.

Pique, at the age of 13, is the dam of Chain Shot 2:06½, Brash 2:15½, and Deputize 2:22½. She was bred at Marshland Farm, and is by Kentucky Wilkes, out of Vexation, by Mambrino Dudley, she out of Verona, by Volunteer.

Red Wilkes list of new standard performers as compiled by A. C. Hendrickson of Belle Mead, N. J., who owns him, contains the names of nine with records from 2:15½ to 2:29½. This gives Red Wilkes a total of 158 in the standard list.

Em. Pierce is dead. The widely known author of "Poems of the Turf" departed this life at his home in Springfield, N. Y., the past week, aged 70 years. The deceased was one of the pioneer horsemen of Erie county and very popular.

Bob Bever has a large stable in his care at the Jewettville covered track, among his charges being Agitato 2:09, Dora Highwood 2:13½, Judge-at-Law 2:15½, Brooks 2:15½, Queen Louise 2:19½, John Taylor 2:16½, Star Eddy 2:23½ and several others.

H. K. Devereux has refused several very flattering offers for the stallion John A. McKerron. The horse will be saved for the race next year for the Boston challenge cup, and Devereux hopes to make it three straight and secure permanent possession of the cup for the Cleveland Club.

W. S. Garrison, Roadstown, N. J., owner of the pacer Dandy C. 2:09½, says that he bought the gelding off a farm on the 22d of June, and that he had never been worked for speed, only driven on the road to buggy and road cart, and had never been hitched to sulky before. He thinks the gelding is a 2:04 pacer sure. Dandy C. is by Andalusian, son of Alcantara, and his dam is by Young Volunteer, son of Volunteer 55.

Geers does not believe The Abbot is "all in" and looks for him to beat his present record another year. His failure to do so this season Geers attributes to the fact that he was in no shape to trot the wonderful mile he did at Brighton Beach.

John Bradburn, superintendent of Village Farm, is of the opinion that it was a mistake to have started The Abbot at Brighton Beach this season so soon after his sickness and that it was this fact alone which prevented the horse from improving his mark this year.

The covering of manure operated so effectively in improving the track at Lexington, Ky., last winter that it will be similarly treated this winter with the expectation that by the time the regular training season opens next spring the course will be in prime condition.

A. P. McDonald talks of making a trotter once more of Connor. This horse has a record of 2:13½ at that gait, but has been pacing for several years past and has a side-wheel mark of 2:03½. He has to be reckoned with in any company in which he starts at either gait. He is twelve years old.

Up to last fall only sixteen pacing mares had beaten 2:07, but this year no less than six mares have beaten that time in a race. They are: Edith W. 2:05, Hetty G. 2:05½, Daniel 2:05½, Mazette 2:06½ and Matin Bells 2:06½. With the exception of Hetty G., all six have taken new records, and she has equalled her record made last year.

W. W. Dexter, for many years secretary of Narragansett Park, Providence, has resigned. Mr. Dexter conducted many of the Rhode Island State Fairs at Narragansett, and was responsible for the two Grand Circuit meetings held there in 1900 and 1901. He was a hustling official, and was the promoter of the first $10,000 pacing stake.

Maple Lawn Farm, Delavan, Ill., has sold to T. H. Foley, Mankato, Minn., the bay weanling stallion by Express, 29199, dam Aunt Alice, by Anteo 2:16½, second dam Miss Alice, by Baron Wilkes 2:18, third dam Steinette, dam of West 2:15½, and Bourhon Russell 2:30, by Steinway 2:25½; fourth dam Ned, dam of five standard performers.

There are eight pacers that have paced in 2:02 or better as follows: Star Pointer 1:59½, John R. Gentry 2:00½, Prince Alert 2:00½, Joe Patchen 2:01½, Little Boy 2:01½, Robert J. 2:01½, Anaconda 2:01½ and Coney 2:02. How many men now alive expected during the day of the high wheel sulky to see or read of such an array of extremely fast sidewheelers.

The well known knight of the sulky, Andy Mc. Dowell, has joined the ranks of "men about town" in New York and is a distinguished figure along Broadway. He drives Arthur Lape's fast Wilton colt, Mr. Wilton, on the speedway two or three times a week and thinks he has a green trotter that can make Cresceus step some to head him.

Peter Stirling 2:11½ is a blood-like chestnut, with a strip in the face, one white ankle forward and two white hind stockings. He stands about 15½ hands and is described by one critic as "a line trotter, with perfect action and conformation, wearing eight ounce shoes forward and six ounce behind, quarter and shin boots forward, with ankle and shin protection behind."

D. B. Whipple, of Bowling Green, O., has bought from George R. Rinker, of Indiana, the dam of the well known pacing mare, Martha Marshall 2:07½ by Ashland Clay. Mr. Whipple intends starting a stock farm and already owns the two year old pacing stallion Gordon Prince and the dams of the pacers Indiana 2:04½, Argetta 2:08½, Joe Pilot 2:08½ and Newton W. 2:11½.

A dispatch from Chillicothe, Ohio, says that the Mosher estate has determined to get rid of the famous mile track where Flying Jib broke the world's record and which has cost over $65,000 to construct. A number of meetings were held there, but did not pay, and it has always been a white elephant. If it can not be sold as a track it will be plowed up and planted in onions.

Although George Leavitt, the well known New England owner of trotters, did not race any of the horses in his stable till late in the season, and several of his best horses were then laid up with distemper, yet his string won close on to $14,000 during the campaign. This was a good showing and further proves that Mr. Leavitt and Trainer James Carpenter are a hard pair to beat.

The well known and popular trainers, Sam and Harry Bush, of Des Moines, Ia., have decided to locate permanently at Colorado Springs, Colo. Harry has gone there now and Sam is soon to follow. While the outlook in the Colorado city for their training business is said to be bright on account of the new track to be built there, the climate is also thought to be more suitable for Harry, who has been in ill health of late.

Bert Shank, the former Kansas trainer and driver, who has during the last few years been training in the East at James Butler's East View Farm, and latterly at Dr. J. C. McCoy's, Kirkwood, Del., has contracted to train at the noted Patchen Wilkes Farm, near Lexington, Ky., home of the great sires, Onward, Patchen Wilkes and J. J. Audubon, where he will have as high class things to work on as can be found in the world.

Ben Tappen, the well-known trainer and driver who went to Europe several years ago and who has done much to introduce the American trotter to Austrian breeders, arrived in New York recently to attend the Madison Square Garden sale. Several other buyers for the Austrian and Italian markets accompanied him. Mr. Tappen has probably taken more high-priced American trotters to Europe than any other one man, among them such winners of European races as Col. Kuser and Bonatella. He bought Contralto and several other high-priced trotters last year.

When Christian Schaurte of Germany was at Lexington recently he stated that comparatively few men in his country were interested in trotting stock, and that most of the mares visiting his stallions were his own. He also spoke of the prejudice in Germany against unsound or blemished horses. In that country stallions are subjected to a rigid inspection, and anything like a curb or a splint is judged to be an unsoundness.

The Chicago Record-Herald says: "M. E. McHenry, the 'man from Freeport,' as he used to be called in the early days of his fame as a knight of the sulky, passed through the city last week on his way east from Hot Springs, where he and Mrs. McHenry have been spending some weeks. He may winter in New York again and he may locate at Cleveland. At any rate he will have his unheavenly bery of this year, Dan Patch 2:04½, again in 1902."

Dave McClary, the man who drove Star Pointer to the world's light harness record, who now has charge of A. A. Bostwick's stable of trotters, is on a delayed wedding tour to Canada. On October 16th he married Miss Dorsey, of Hartford, Conn., daughter of Matt Dorsey, well known to the trotting horse world. So well did Mr. McClary keep his marriage secret that aside from a few friends of the family no one knew anything about it until he was well on his way to Canada.

Margrave 2:15½, the handsome son of Baron Wilkes, owned by S. J. Fleming & Son of Terre Haute, Ind., cut quite a wide swath at the recent Chicago horse show. His greatest victory was over a great field in the ring for the grand prize for trotting stallions. In this class he met and defeated the great $10,000 show stallion, Dr. Pitzer 2:12½, Joymaker and other noted prize winners. Margrave is clearly one of the grandest individuals in the country, and is a show stallion of pronounced merit. His color is slightly against him in the show ring, but even with this handicap he is a hard one for the judges to pass by, so superior is he in so many other respects.—Western Horseman.

Billy Andrews is now located in New York with several of E. H. Harriman's horses, among them the "saucy little red horse" John R. Gentry 2:00½, Helen Grace 2:11½ and Elsie S. 2:11½. He will jog them on the speedway and adjacent roads to keep them in shape, as it is his opinion that the roads are better there during the winter months than at Goshen. While Mr. Andrews asserted on his arrival that he did not propose to get mixed up with the brushing brigade on the speedway, it is known that he considers Gentry in shape to go just about as fast as he ever did, and it would not be surprising to see him tackle the pacing kings and queens of the speedway some fine morning.

The Caton filly Ilive, whose sale at Chicago for $1775 to the owner of Peter Stirling, the sensational colt of the season just closed, means that she will fall into the hands of trainer Chandler, one of the most competent men in the United States in developing the young things. It is evident that both her new owner and trainer regard her not only as the best of the Highwoods, but also as a promising proposition for the rich stakes announced for the youngsters next season. She is a full sister to Early Reaper 2:09½, and although it is not common for owners to follow up successes such as attended Peter Stirling in 1901, this filly looks to have a strong chance to increase the wealth and reputation of the Wisconsin owner.

George Starr has a pacing proposition which he thinks will do next year, and this is Home Circle 2:13½ by Axtell, the dam being the dam of Planet 2:04½. Home Circle and Planet were both bred by Starr. The former, it is claimed, is much faster than his record would indicate, as at Memphis Vance Nuckols took him out one morning and stepped the little fellow a mile in 2:08½. He is one of the best mannered pacers on the turf, and as he beat 2:09 so handily at the close of a campaign, which must have taken the edge off his speed, it is fair to assume that he will have something to say in the 2:14 class another year. Nuckols is in hopes that Home Circle will be able to take the place of Tom Nolan 2:08½, a horse that has served him long and faithfully and that is now to be retired to the road.

Jack Curry's enthusiasm when he campaigned the gray stallion Serpol 2:10 on three legs, or his air of superiority when he trained the Tammany tiger for Richard Croker, or yet his extreme egotism when he drove that handsome female mule in the "Transylvanica" race at the recent Memphis meeting, are as nothing compared to his feeling of exaltation when he speaks of the champion hopped pacer, Prince Alert, which he drove with such success the past season. To a crowd of speedway roadites and professional drivers in the Review office the other day, he said that the Prince has the most sensitive mouth of any horse he ever drove. That assertion probably explains the erratic action of the gelding in the past. Jack said that in turning around for a start, he was compelled to allow Alert to do just as he pleased and that he let the lines hang loose until he got straightened well away before he dared take him in hand. Really, Jack has reason to be proud of his prowess with the reins, for it is not every driver that could take such an erratic horse and drive him a season without making a break, to say nothing of the sensational time he made. "Now, I'll tell you something about Prince Alert that you may not believe," said Jack, "but it is just as true as Joe Patchen. He is the brainiest horse that ever wore iron. One of his many peculiarities is, that he always gets hungry in the night. When the hungry feeling comes over him he will first try to attract the attention of the groom who sleeps in his stall by nosing his feed rack or pawing the floor. If that don't bring the desired food, he will go to the water bucket, fill his mouth and slobber it all over the face of the groom, which is sure to awaken him to the requirements of the occasion. If that isn't true, I never pulled a line over Alert."—Chicago Horse Review.

San Francisco, Saturday, November 30, 1901.

OVER TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS was paid at the Fasig-Tipton sale in New York last Tuesday night for a trotting filly that will not be two years old until next April. She was advertised in the Marcus Daly catalogue as "the greatest yearling in the world" and is an own sister to Prelates 2:15½, the champion two year old of this year. "Miss Previous" is the euphonious as well as the apropos name given this precocious little miss, who is credited with a trial eighth in 15½ seconds, and a quarter in 33¾ at Lexington this fall, less than eight weeks after she was broken. She is by Ponce de Leon 2:13, who sold the day before for $6500. There is food for a little thought right here. A stallion, royally bred, a great individual, fourteen years old, comparatively young, and sire of fifteen in the list, sells for but little more than half of what one of his yearling daughters brings at the same sale. The price paid for Ponce de Leon can be earned by him within a year in any State in this country where horse breeding is carried on to any extent, and yet one of his yearlings is considered by the best buyers in America to be worth more than he by several thousand dollars. What is the reason? Simply that Miss Previous has shown herself to possess speed of a very high order, and being well staked has a very large earning capacity. She is entered in the Kentucky Futurity, $20,000; in the Hartford Futurity, $10,000, and the Terre Haute Matron, $10,000. In these stakes Miss Previous has the opportunity to win much more than her purchase price, and as she is absolutely sound the chances are all in favor of her keeping up to her present promises as a racing machine. And it is on these chances that there are many men ready to invest capital. On the other hand there is really no boom in the prices of breeding animals. In the broodmare ranks there have been several notable sales during the New York auction and what would have been considered high prices a few years ago have this week been paid for broodmares that were producers or bred in producing lines, but the prices were not sensational. It is the same with the thoroughbred sales. High class, highly tried colts and fillies bring big money at the auctions where thoroughbreds are offered, while broodmares are not eagerly sought after. The prices that can be obtained for good stallions and good broodmares at the present time are nearer their actual value than at any period for years. Some owners have set a false value on their stock and are greatly disappointed at the prices offered by those who are in the market, and as a consequence are losing sales that should be made. The demand for horses is in excess of the supply, but there is a very limited demand at the figures which some breeders are asking. We do not look for the public to go horse crazy soon again as they did ten years ago, as every new comer in the business is trying to profit by the mistakes made then by others. A fast colt prospect, well staked, is worth a big price at the present time and a well bred stallion or mare that is a producer can be sold at a fair valuation. Ponce de Leon at $6500 is an example. With good management and good luck his buyer can get his money back with good interest by the time the horse has finished his stud career, but the chances of his doing this were the price three or four times as large, are not great. Owners who want to sell breeding stock should not set their values too high at the present time. There is no gambling boom in that class of live stock of any breed, but there is a certain and a fair profit to be made from investments at reasonable prices.

THE SIXTH National Stallion Race and the Sixth Matron, two great races for two year olds, are announced by the Westchester Racing Association in far advertising columns today. Here are two great colt stakes which should attract many entries from California breeders. The National Stallion Race is for the progeny of stallions nominated by Tuesday, December 10th, this year. Every owner of a thoroughbred stallion whose horse was in service last year should deem it a great privilege to name him in this stake that his produce, the foals of 1901, may be eligible. By looking over the advertised conditions it will be seen that the produce of stallions that have not produced a winner prior to December 1st this year will be allowed five pounds, and that the nominators of the sires of the first, second and third horses shall receive 25, 15 and 10 per cent respectively of the stallion subscriptions. This race will be over the last five furlongs of the Eclipse course at Morris Park. The Sixth Matron Stake has $10,000 added and is for the foals of mares covered this year. It will be run in the autumn of 1904, and is to be in two races, one for colts and geldings, the other for fillies. Subscriptions for mares to close at $20 each or only $10 if the money accompanies the entry. The nominator of the dam of the winner will receive fifty per cent of the starting money of this race. Here are two great races in which every California breeder of thoroughbreds should have nominations. We ask every one to look over the conditions and mail their entries to one or both events by Tuesday, December 10 h.

THE SARATOGA ASSOCIATION will close a number of stakes on Monday next, December 2d, that should not be overlooked by California breeders and owners of thoroughbred horses. Saratoga is to be the great Mecca of horsemen from all over the world. Before the 1904 stakes are decided it will be the chief racing point of this continent, and that the money to be won there will be greater than can be won at any other course in the world is beyond any doubt. The enormous amount of money in the stakes offered by this association is marvelous. The Spinaway has a value of $14,000; the Hopeful of 1903 will be worth $25,000 or more; for three year olds of the same year are the Travers of $10,000, and the Kenner and the Alabama of $5000 each. In 1904 will be the Great Republic of $50,000 and the Hopeful of $40,000, each valuation guaranteed. Mr. W. C. Whitney, formerly Secretary of the Navy under President Cleveland, is President of this association and H. K. Knapp is Secretary.

DECEMBER 3d is the date set for the sale at the Occidental Horse Exchange, when six yearlings by St. Carlo, seven by Joe Ripley and a half dozen two and three year olds by imp. Piccolo are to be sold. At the same time a number of horses in training from the Burns & Waterhouse stables will be sold. Among them are Pat Morrissey, Gibraltar, Panamint, Dolly Weitoff, Duckoy, Sailor, Cathello, Armado, and a two year old filly out of Sallie Sensible. This sale should draw the hanner crowd of the sale season, as there are high class yearlings, full brothers and sisters to winners, as well as tried race horses to be sold. The sale will begin at 8 o'clock at 721 Howard street.

Teach Them to Trot.

[American Horse Breeder.]

Many animals that are inclined to pace may be educated to trot fast. It will be well for breeders to instruct their trainers to make trotters of as large a proportion of their young stock as possible. If those who breed trotting stock will insist upon this the proportion of trotters to pacers will be much larger in future than it has been for the past few years. If trainers will take half the pains in educating those animals to trot which show an inclination to pace, that Marvin did to convert Smuggler from the pacing to the trotting gait, they will find that the time so spent will prove a profitable investment.

The story of Smuggler's conversion is familiar to most of our readers. It is told minutely in Marvin's work entitled "Training the Trotting Horse." The substance of it is contained in the following extract from that valuable work:

I have tried every known method of conversion with Smuggler, and at times I despaired of ever teaching him to trot. He was a pacer through and through. First I shod him with an ordinary shoe, but had to increase this again and again, until he finally wore two pounds on each front foot, his hind shoes being ordinary five-ounce ones. It has been contended, I believe, that Smuggler was injured by carrying excessive weight, and that is possibly true. He had the best feet, joints, cannons and tendons, and had it been otherwise he might not have stood what seemed necessary to be done.

I tried the cross-strap, by which it is made impossible for a horse to pace; I tried the plan of placing rails on the ground at such intervals as would compel the horse to put his feet down in the diagonal order; tried weighting in every way, and all availed nothing. Finally, by a sort of inspiration, I struck on a plan which perhaps found its first growth in the knowledge that a horse cannot turn short at the pace. I would start him up slowly and rather suddenly throw him off to one side at a pretty sharp angle, compelling him to change his gait, and the new gait he would keep for a few steps. As soon as he came back to the pace I would swing him off sideways again.

Of course, this was virtually driving around in a small circle until he began to go a considerable distance trotting. At each time he would remain at the trot a little longer, and after the long, tedious and discouraging experimenting the reader may well understand how glad and encouraged I was when one day, after going around in a circle eleven times, Smuggler struck a trot and kept it up for a quarter of a mile. Before this I had unsuccessfully worked with him for twenty-eight days. The third day after this evidence of a change of heart he went a full mile, trotting, in 4:20, and two days later did a little better, trotting the mile in 4:00. The seventh day after showing his first inclination to trot he showed a mile in 2:59, and the rapidity of his improvement is shown by the fact that on the thirteenth day he trotted the mile in 2:41½, the twenty-first day he worked three heats in 2:48½, 2:38½ and 2:32, and the twenty-eighth day miles in 2:32½, 2:30½.

This ended the work for that season, and during the winter Smuggler suffered from an attack of epizootic. He was jogged easily during March, 1873, and in April we began working him again. On May 1st, he was good enough to trot a mile in 2:27, and do it in a way that was full of promise of improvement. The second week in May he trotted a mile in 2:25, and three days afterward in 2:23. Then Mr. Benjamin Akers offered $10,000 for him, but we declined the offer.

He kept right on gathering speed, and improving in form every day, and a week after Akers offered $10,000 for him he went a mile in 2:22; the next week he trotted three miles in 2:26, 2:21½ and 2:20, and the following week I worked him two miles in 2:19½ and 2:20½. He was then sold to Capt. W. S. Tough, of Leavenworth, Kan., and shipped to New York in my charge."

When a horse shows an inclination to pace nowadays most trainers clap a set of hoppers on him, so that he must stick to that gait, and then they set him going as fast as possible. It is probable that many thousands of dollars may be added to the value of the horse stock of this country every year for a long time to come, if competent trainers will exert themselves to their utmost in efforts to develop speed at the trot instead of the pace. It would be unwise to attempt it with the members of such a pacing family as the Hal, but it is certainly worth while to try the experiment with the trotting bred animals that show an inclination to pace

A turf prodigy is Redfern, the midget horseman, who has just been engaged by Col. James E. Pepper of Lexington, Ky., for two seasons at $9000 a year, an amount greater than the salary of two Vice-Presidents of the United States and the highest ever paid a lightweight jockey in any country. In addition to this Redfern will have the opportunity to earn at least $6000 per year additional through the acceptance of mounts when Col. Pepper's horses are not racing. Redfern is but 16 years of age and weighs seventy pounds. He is the son of W. W. Redfern, and had his first experience in the saddle riding his father's horse, Fred K., around the stable shed when he was 11 years old. He rode his first race in 1898, and at St. Louis last year he had his first winning mount on Dr. Rowell's Maylay. Since that time he has steadily improved, and was easily the best boy on the Canadian circuit this year. After the close of the meeting at Ft. Erie he went East, where his bright, attractive face, manly demeanor and reputation for strict integrity won him a number of friends among the horsemen. In his first race here he quickly demonstrated that he was a born horseman. His light hands, alertness at the post, excellent judgment, ability to whip a horse and spur him with both legs at the same time—something older jockeys are unable to accomplish—proclaimed him a genius in his art, if no accident should befall him and he retains his skill, the boy will be able to command this salary—if not more—for at least six years before he takes on sufficient flesh to bring him up among the heavyweight riders. From present indications he will be able to ride for at least ten years, as his physique is similar to Tod Sloan's, small, but like wire."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The highest price of the first day of the Old Glory sale at New York was paid by Thomas W. Lawson, of Boston, for Ponce de Leon 2:13. His bid was $6500. This stallion is fourteen years old and sire of fifteen standard performers, three of which are in the 2:15 list, and the fastest Edwin B. 2:12½. Ponce de Leon is by Pancoast 2:21½ out of Elvira 2:18½ by Cuyler, second dam Mary Mambrino by Mambrino Patchen, third dam Belle Wagner by Wagner the thoroughbred.

On a hot day drink Jackson's Napa Soda lemonade and he refreshed.

SULKY NOTES.

Directum sold for $12,100.

Adbell's price was $10,000.

Ponce de Leon brought $6500.

A fast pacer is for sale. See advertisement.

The date set for the appearance of Cresceus at Los Angeles is December 12th.

Bow Bells sold for $5100 and two days afterwards a half interest in him brought $5000.

Cresceus will perform at San Jose next Thursday, December 5th, weather permitting.

Ed Geers predicts that The Abbot will lower his record next season, barring accidents.

Bow Bells 2:19½, son of Electioneer and Beautiful Bells, brought $5100 at the Marcus Daly sale.

Tilly, a four year old trotter by Alcandre 2:26½, son of Alcyone 2:27, won not far from $5400 in Austria the past summer.

Mr. C. K. G. Billings was the most prominent winner at the late Chicago Horse Show. His entries were awarded nineteen blue ribbons and some of other colors, twenty-six in all.

It has long been the general impression among practical breeders that the influence of the sire is greater than that of the dam, as a rule, in controlling gait and conformation of the foal.

sells more horses at big prices than any other man in the country, and has an eye for a bargain that seldom deceives him. He purchased Adbell for $10,000 at the New York sale this week and gave $5000 for a half interest in Bow Bells.

B. O. Van Bokkelen, who has been at Syracuse, New York, since the closing of the Grand Circuit, is on his way home with his string of horses and is expected to arrive at San Jose any day. He has the McKinney colt, Tom Smith, the Hambletonian Wilkes trotter Vic Schellar 2:14½, a colt called Moffit by Sable Wilkes, and one or two others.

Geo. Fox of Clements, owner of the Robert McGregor stallion Silver Bow 2:16, will probably send his mare Bessie Pancoast to Toledo next spring to be bred to Cresceus. Bessie Pancoast is by Pancoast out of Bessie Bowne by Dictator, second dam Lady Lightfoot by Mambrino Time, third dam by Paddy Burns, fourth dam by Moseley's Copperhead.

It is now said that Higgs' Brown Dick, the sire of Little Belle, dam of this season's only new 2:04 pacer, Harold H. 2:04, is a son of Fitzsimmons' St. Lawrence. The St. Lawrence blood has been prominent in many other of the greatest performers bred in Canada, while it has also been borne by Directum 2:05½, Dione 2:07½, Hulda 2:08½ and numerous others of the most famous bred in the United States.

An item of interest in connection with this year's list of sires of 2:15 dams is found in the pedigree of Easter 2:12½. She is the first 2:15 trotter that has been in many years out of a daughter of Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Further evidence that the blood of the "Old Hero of Chester" is still marching on is found in the fact that nine of his sons sired dams of 2:15 trotters this year, as follows: Aberdeen, Deucalion, General Stanton, Harold, Happy Medium, Idol, Masterlode, Squire Talmage and Norwood.

WM. HAROLD 2:13 1-4, Sire of JANICE 2:08 1-4.

Stalls can be had at Napa track for $2 per month. Where a number are taken a reduction will be made. The track is being put in fine condition and the roads around Napa are excellent to jog on. There is no better place to train horses. See advertisement.

Oliver J. by Capt. Jones stepped an eighth of a mile in 0:24 to a high wheel cart at Irvington last Wednesday. Mr. Grace will match him against any colt, of any age, bred and raised in Oregon for $500, to be raced for at the State Fair in 1902.—Portland Rural Spirit.

When all the records are made up it will be found that McKinney 2:11½ leads all sires of new performers for this year. He will have about seventeen, and the majority of them will be in the 2:20 list, and four in the 2:15 list. He has twice as many in the new 2:15 list as any other stallion.

Acorn, a handsome four year old stallion by Oaknut 2:24½ out of a mare by Whippleton, second dam by the thoroughbred horse Bayswater, is offered for sale. Acorn has size and style and from his breeding and individuality should sire fine roadsters and horses with speed enough to race. See advertisement.

Mr. B. S. Krehe of Sutter county, who recently purchased the stallions Alcyo 2:10 and Pistol in the east, has arranged to have them make the season of 1902 at San Jose. They are two grandly bred stallions, both fine individuals, and breeders should look them over and study their pedigrees before the breeding season opens.

It is generally conceded that John Madden is one of the brainiest men in the horse business. He buys and an exchange says that "One of the steppers shown by C. K. G. Billings at Chicago was the dock-tailed trotter Brown Boy by Advance 2:22½, dam by Wagner's Bashaw 2:25½. This horse used to plow corn on his owner's farm in Marion county, Ia. Then he was campaigned, and last year gained a trotting record of 2:14½ on a half-mile track. At Chicago he was adjudged the best hansom cab horse in the show. The boys in the Billings stable say that his real forte is for saddle work, but that he can do anything, from herding the cows to leading a tandem. He is 15.3½ hands high."

T. W. Barstow of San Jose will probably send his stallion Wilkes Direct 2:22½ to Los Angeles in the spring, that he may make a season in the stud there. Wilkes Direct is a full brother to the great stallion John A. McKerron 2:06½ and is one of the best individuals in California. He should attract the best mares in Southern California as his breeding is such that he should nick well with them. His sire is Nutwood Wilkes 2:16½, one of the greatest stallions ever foaled, and his dam is Ingar, a great broodmare by Director, second dam also a great broodmare by Echo.

Those well known horsemen, the Owens Brothers, whose faces are familiar on nearly every running and trotting track in California, have sold their breeding farm at Clovis, Fresno county, and before long the 550 acres which comprised it will be planted to grape vines. Among the horses bred by the Owens Bros. are the pacers Jo Wheeler 2:07½ and Daken D. 2:16½, the latter making his record as a three year old last year. Among the thoroughbreds that were raised and trained on this farm are that good horse Grady, the fast colt Flush of Gold and the well known horses Pulaski, Gold Dust and others.

Racing Boom in the North.

[Portland Oregonian]

There will be some good horse racing throughout the Pacific Northwest next season, if present indications count for anything. The Pacific Northwest Racing Association is scheduled to meet in Seattle about January 1st, and the program for the coming season will then be arranged. Heretofore there have been many conflicts in the race and fair schedules, and racehorse men have been compelled to travel back and forth, retracing their steps several times in order to attend all the meets. It is understood that the new schedule will put matters to rights, and that the racehorse men will be able to make the entire circuit in one continuous trip, thus avoiding many unnecessary delays and expenses.

The leasing of the Irvington track by two well known horse breeders has awakened local interest in the sport, and it is quite likely that Portland will see some fast horses on the turf next year.

M. D. Wisdom, secretary of the State Board of Agriculture, is quite enthusiastic over racing prospects, and predicts some fast performances. Speaking of the situation yesterday, Mr. Wisdom said:

"The Pacific Northwest is going to see a fine lot of races next summer. The association will make out a schedule that will be a very convenient one, and the horsemen will not have to retrace their steps as they have done heretofore. The whole circuit will be a first class one, as the successful race meets that were held in this part of the country last season will draw many fast horses from California and other neighboring states. I do not know what dates will be assigned to Portland, but I am sure the local meets will be successful in every way, for they will be a part of the general circuit, and there will be plenty of fast horses and good, clean sport. Mr. Simpson and Mr. Hellman, the gentlemen who have leased the Irvington track, are prominent horse breeders, and are good, square men. You may depend upon it, there will be no 'crooked work' at the Irvington track with these men in charge. The trouble with the Irvington races heretofore lay in the fact that they had no substantial foundation on which to stand. If they become a part of the circuit, that will insure their success.

"The races at the Stato Fair were very successful, and we intend to boom the proposition right ahead for next year. We are going to put up a $2000 stake for a 2:11 pace. This will be the largest purse ever offered on the Pacific Coast, and ought to be a great drawing card in itself. These big purses are not such expensive luxuries as most people imagine, for there are always plenty of entrance fees for them, while our small purses go begging. We have 60 entries for the 2 year old colt stake next year, and the contest will be a lively one. On the whole, the prospects for a successful racing season in 1902 are bright."

Geo. H. Ketcham, owner of Cresceus 2:02½, sent a bid of $12,000 to be made on Directum 2:05½, at the New York sale last Wednesday. The bid of $12,100 made by the International Stock Farm of Minneapolis, got the horse. Had Mr. Ketcham's bid been the highest he would have placed the horse in the stud at Toledo with Cresceus and would have had the champion and the ex-champion trotting stallion under one roof.

The picture of Cresceus 2:02½, presented to our readers today as a supplement to the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN is one of the best ever made of this great horse. He seldom stands with his head as high as in the picture, but holds his neck almost on a straight line.

In hot weather there is no drink like Jackson's Napa Soda—plain in a lemonade.

Oakland Show Notes.

The highest class of dogs ever seen at an Oakland show will be hench next week. The entries made give approximately the same number as were made last year, with the difference that this year's exhibition has a better local support. There is a noticeable absence of entries from Oregon and Washington, and also an unexpected fall down in entries from the southern portion of the State. Taking into consideration the excellent support given the recent Los Angeles show by local fanciers, the non-appearance of dogs owned in the south, after assurances had been given that some entries would be made, is rather surprising. The reason the entry of dogs from the sections referred to is so lacking is believed to be due to the same malevolent influences that have cropped up repeatedly in the past with the inevitable results of creating indifference and lack of enthusiasm in the minds of new recruits to the ranks of the fancy, followed by a final disgust and withdrawal when the true character of the misguiding influence is ascertained.

An example of this was seen at the Los Angeles show where one exhibitor who had been led to believe that her dog was a world beater, threw away the ribbons won, in chagrin and disgust, because the final win was taken by another dog. We know of other exhibitors who have been misled in the same manner who will not now put their dogs on the bench.

The list of entries by breeds is as follows: Mastiffs 2, St. Bernards 12, Great Danes 12, Deerhounds 2, Greyhounds 4, American Foxhounds 2, Pointers 5, English Setters 10, Gordon Setters 4, Irish Water Spaniels 1, Cocker Spaniels 35, Boston Terriers 5, Bull Terriers 10, Bulldogs 5, Poodles 1, Collies 18, Fox Terriers 40, Irish Terriers 1, Scotch Terriers 3, Maltese Terriers 3, Japanese Spaniels 3, Miscellaneous 1. Total 187 entries.

Much interest is manifested among the Fox Terrier fancy over the appearance of the Eastern crack, Champion Daddy, on the Oakland bench.

This high class terrier was purchased from Mr. Ingwersen by John Bradshaw, of this city, for the Colonial Kennels, owned by Ackerman and Morgan. Daddy was whelped in 1896 and is by Hunton Bridegroom out of Beacon Tartross. He was formerly owned by Mr. Redmond, the noted English Fox Terrier breeder who had him in the stud (charging $30 a service, quite a fee across the water) and bred him repeatedly to all of his own good hitches, so we are informed. His progeny in England have made their mark on the bench, notably his son Champion Don Caesar, reckoned one of the best Fox Terriers in England. His first appearance in America was at the Westminster Kennel Club show in 1900, where he won first in limit, second open and reserve winners to Norfolk Veracity. He subsequently won on the circuit in Chicago, Kansas City, St. Paul, Boston, St. Louis, Pittsburg and Cleveland. This year his last appearance was at Dallas, where he won a special for best, gaining enough wins during his career on the American bench to win his championship. He is all white in color and has been described by leading terrier authorities as all over a terrier, teeming with quality, having a long clean head and is a wonderful shower in the ring.

Another newcomer in the Fox Terrier ranks will be seen in the recent purchase from Norfolk Kennels by Mr. Chas. K. Harley, of this city, of a young dog Norfolk Billy. Concerning this dog and his appearance at the Hamilton show this month the American Stock-keeper says: "Novice dogs brought out a very classy terrier in Norfolk Billy, long punishing head, nice ear and front; if he tightens up in body and shoulder, he will be a hummer." He won first in novice and limit and two in winners to Norfolk Richmond. He will be shown in the future as Wan Dee Jester, such being his registered name with the A. K. C.

Pacific Coast Field Trials.

The nineteenth annual Pacific Coast field trials will be run at Santa Maria, Santa Barbara county, commencing Monday, January 13, 1902, such is the announcement of the gentlemen who had the selection of the trial grounds in charge. The entries for the All-Age Stake will close December 15th. For information and entry blanks those interested are referred to Mr. Albert Betz, the secretary, No. 201 Parrott Building, this city.

Santa Maria is a nicely located, pleasant town of about 1500 inhabitants and has ample hotel and stable accommodations. The citizens are en rapport with the contemplated project of holding the trials at their town and have given assurances that the visiting sportsmen will find everything congenial and pleasant. Dr. H. C. Bagby, a leading citizen and prominent sportsman, has kindly taken upon himself the task of looking after the handlers, who will go to Santa Maria with their strings of dogs for the purpose of giving the dogs the preliminary work. He will see that the handlers are nicely located, there being a number of excellent places available. Birds are reported to be plentiful. From all reports it would seem that the place selected is to be the scene of a successful meeting. An examination of proposed trial grounds at Monterey and Salinas showed that the dense cover in both cases made the selection of either place objectionable for holding a field trial meet.

Santa Maria can be reached by taking the train to San Luis Obispo, changing there to the narrow gauge road one can go direct to the town. Another way is to continue on from San Luis Obispo down the Coast line to Guadalupe. From thence to Santa Maria by stage is seven miles and rather the quickest route. The Coast line will be running regular trains and good connections can be made from this city.

There is a small lake within easy driving distance of Santa Maria where good duck and snipe shooting can be had and quail shooting in the vicinity is reported to be excellent.

The announcement of the trials appears on page 14.

DOINGS IN DOGDOM.

A full page illustrated story appeared recently in one of our Sunday journals detailing a somewhat sensational account of the successful operation performed by a surgeon upon a dog for appendicitis—the operation was successful, the vermiform appendix removed and the dog also survived.

Very clever indeed, but as a matter of fact, the dog has no vermiform appendix in his visceral makeup and consequently the story was a purely imaginative one.

Early in January it is proposed to hold a combined show for dogs, cats and poultry at Chicago, the plans for which are now being perfected. The show will open, it is rumored, about January 14th, in the Coliseum. The show promises to be the largest affair of its kind ever held in the West. Among those actively interested in the project are Mr. Fred L. Kinney and Mrs. Leland, of Chicago; Mrs. Edith Kingman Poyer, of Woodstock, Ill. Fanciers from as far west as Kansas City and east to Cleveland have announced their intention of sending exhibits. Indications point to a very successful exhibition.

Mrs. Thos. Murphy, owner of the Gabilan Kennels, Hollister, writes us, stating that she has recently purchased a handsome and promising young Setter dog from W. J. Baughn, Ridgeville, Ind. The new comer is a year and a half old; he is by Count Danstone (Ch. Gladstone-Dan's Lady) out of Fairland Queen (Cincinnati Pride-Queen Vic). This breeding is much liked by Setter men. Count Danstone's work is well known; several of his progeny acquitted themselves with honor at field trials last year. Fairland Queen is a sister of five field trial winners.

Gabilan Kennels have now with Mr. Baughn an English Setter bitch by Luke C. out of Nancy Hanks. She will be bred to Count Danstone. The new arrival will be benched at the Oakland show.

BARKS.

Collies are generally full grown when a year old.

Some dogs, and dirty ones at that, have freckled bellies, others have freckled faces.

Light eyes are objectionable in a black Cocker Spaniel. In many instances highly bred prize Cockers do not make good mothers.

The average age of a dog is claimed by some authorities to be about ten years, although the large breeds reach fifteen and sixteen years.

One of the best ways to teach a dog to kill rats quickly is to give him a number to kill at once after he has been accustomed to killing them.

About the only sure preventative for a bitch who eats her puppies is to muzzle her and have a foster mother in readiness to look after the puppies.

Cyclers in Belgium and Germany have a custom of using dogs to aid in drawing them uphill. We are inclined to believe the practice would be short-lived here.

In selecting an Irish Terrier puppy, choose one of the darker ones of good breeding. Select the pups with the longest heads, stoutest hodies, smallest ears and hardest coats.

Strike!—if they don't give you Jackson's Napa Soda

A well known truth in breeding is, that as sure as you breed a dog who may be grandly bred on the sire's side, but who is from a dam of bad type, several of the puppies will throw back to her.

The reason for the popularity and good standing of the Boston Terrier is that they are ideal house dogs and companions, not too large in size, short haired, naturally neat, very intelligent, not quarrelsome and splendid with children.

A very good method to detect sarcoptic mange where a microscope is not available is to bring the affected animal in close proximity to a hot stove, then the parasite, stimulated to increased activity by the heat, produces intolerable itching which causes the animal to scratch and bite its skin in a violent manner. A midday summer sun will produce similar effects.

A plea was made some time ago by an eastern sportsman's journal urging that there be a uniformity in the size of the pages of all bench show catalogues. This idea met with the approval of many fanciers. If a standard of size could be adopted for catalogues as well as premium lists, the preservation of catalogues would be more observed, the utility of the plan would show itself in the handiness for binding and reference.

The Blenheim Spaniels which wagged their tails when former Duchesses of Marlborough snapped their aristocratic fingers, had very sharp, pointed noses and small eyes. Curs of high degree degenerate and evolve, as well as their masters. The Blenheim Spaniels of to-day are as different from those of their ancestors as possible. The family portraits of the Marlboroughs with their dogs of a hundred years ago prove this. The dog of to-day has a flat face and goggle eyes.

A very popular dog is the Skye Terrier at the present time. For sagacity, faithfulness and attachment to their masters they are not excelled to any great degree by any member of the canine species. As house guards they are extremely valuable, one quality they possess being a very acute hearing. As a vermin dog the breed is almost without a peer. In some parts of Scotland Skyes are bred for the special purpose of following the fox and dislodging the wildcat from her den generally among rocks and cairns of stone at the foot of the hills.

One breed that has caught the ultra-fashionable fancy in the East is the white French silk-coated Toy Poodle. This candidate for popularity with the fair sex is of French descent and is known in France as the "Love Dog." As toy dogs they are much admired for their intelligence and beauty. In disposition they are models of affection and docility. Their coat, which is their striking peculiarity, is very beautiful, being long, curly and as fine as silk. In weight these dogs run from 6 to 10 pounds. They are gamey, quick, very active and as watch dogs in the house they are perfect little alarm clocks. Like all of the poodle species they are gifted with wonderful intelligence. We believe that there is not at present a book or monograph on the Poodle, which is rather an odd circumstance.

The Borzoi or Russian Wolfhound.

The aristocrat of the canine world is undoubtedly the Russian Wolfhound or Borzoi, as he is sometimes called. He is a new dog to this country, is tall and noble-looking, and because of his beauty of form and outline, majestic bearing and elegant carriage, is fast becoming both in England and America one of the most popular of dogs. A true Russian Wolfhound has the same disposition as the Collie, is quite as gentle and is fond of children. In addition to his beauty, he possesses excellent qualities which, under proper conditions, admirably fit him to be both pet and pleasant comrade. In general type, he should be something between the Deerhound and the Greyhound, for, while lacking some of the bone and wire-like sinews of the former, he should possess more substance than the latter. Every inch of his shapely form should be elegant, while one of his chief charms lies in his expressive face.

In general appearance he is strikingly handsome and of the Deerhound type, but infinitely more graceful and with considerable more quality. His intelligent, winning and confiding expression; his long rakish head, so aristocratic in bearing; his long, narrow, delicately chiseled skull; his cleanly cut and tapering muzzle; his gracefully arched neck; his narrow but deep chest; his sloping back, elegantly arched loin and long tail fringed with glossy hair; his hindquarters and his body covered with long, silky coat, are the make-up of a dog that has substantial claims to be considered one of the handsomest varieties of the canine race.

Here we have a tall, singularly handsome dog, larger, but keeping all the grace of the Greyhound, with the added attraction of a coat as handsome as the finest ever worn by a Llewellyn or a Laverack. There is a lot of intelligence, too, in this dog's narrow head; and his heart is in the right place and big enough to faithfully love those who love him, and to support him in a flying chase or in battle.

These dogs in Russia are considered the only dog suitable for coursing and killing the wolf, as no other dogs have the courage to run down a wolf and hold him when caught. For courage they are without an equal, and when better known will be used entirely for coursing, as in long courses they easily outclass a Greyhound and are far superior in disposition, more obedient and far more trustworthy and intelligent.

The laws of Russia are, of course, widely different from a country like ours, and as the chase is there preserved, none but the nobility take part, so with this grand, aristocratic dog the right to own them is reserved entirely for the titled class, and of this very nobility only certain ones named under the crown are allowed to breed Wolfhounds.

All this has gone a great way toward maintaining the characteristics of the great dog of the chase and has maintained a wonderful uniformity of type. But this also makes the Wolfhound very hard to obtain; these gentlemen are very jealous of their individual strains, and being all men of large means, are not easily moved by our great American motive power of gold, which has been the magnet that brought over to the United States the pick of some breeds in England—the Bulldogs, Bull Terriers and Fox Terriers, for instance.

The Borzoi is so large and active that he should never be kept where he cannot be given plenty of exercise. He is a thing of beauty and a joy forever about the country house, and he shows to marked advantage when accompanying a smartly equipped trap, or, better still, when bounding beside some well mounted and fair equestrienne.

A few Borzois, some of them very good ones too, have been seen at the different benches shows in this city and in other Coast shows. But notwithstanding the general favorable opinions vouchsafed, a question frequently asked by visitors to the shows has been "But what use are these dogs here?" And a very absurd question it was. We know of a number of ranches in this State where they have pure bred Borzois, as well as some cross-bred dogs, and they are demons in the hunt for coyotes, running them down and killing them, either singly or after the quarry in packs. On the ranch of Clinton E. Worden, Esq., are some well trained and gamey Wolfhounds that have killed many coyotes. There was a kennel of Borzois maintained at Riverside by Mr. Robert N. Allen several years ago. Although there are numerous specimens of the breed owned here and there throughout the State we do not know of any breeder who has gone into the fancy for these superb dogs to any considerable extent. The question reverted to, what use are Wolfhounds, could he answered with much argument in their favor. On ranches and in suburban districts they are a good thing to keep the wolf from the door in whatever form he may come. Further, most people who keep Collies do not keep any sheep; if they had them the Collies would attend to them, but one is not required to have a drawing-room full of sheep because a Collie is the fancy; a lamb's wool carpet would fill the bill and is cleaner.

GUN.

Duck Loads.

In these days of machine loaded shells, few care to take the trouble to fill their own cartridges. However, as a general thing those few are the painstaking ones who take pleasure and pride in killing birds with their own handiwork, and each one has some particular fad which he thinks superior to any load which ever struck down a bird. As each man swears by his own gun, so each loader who has experimented, thinks he has succeeded in reaching as near perfection as powder and shot may attain.

In the old days we shot as much black powder as the shoulder would stand, writes R. L. Hedderly, and as little shot as was required to fill out the killing circle of the gun. That was before the advent of the nitro and smokeless powders, and those days are still green in the memory of every sportsman, for if there was a little hother about that thick white fog that enveloped the gun every shot, and a number of necessary gymnastics to dodge the same in order to see whether Greeny had "climbed into the starry vaults of heaven" or wilted like a wet rag, still Greeny was there in those days, and had as company all the rest of the feathered tribe. The ducks were numerous in the days of black powder.

In this later time the birds are scarcer, and they are usually somewhat wilder, owing to almost continual persecution. But what the sportsman loses in the number of shots offered, he has gained double in the keen pleasure of shooting a compound which will kill as far and as dead as the old reliable "soft coal" of his fond memory—a compound which makes little or no smoke, and does not cloud the vision. The satisfaction is doubled, for the very action of the bird is plainly visible from the time he comes into sight until the death-dealing charge rends his graceful form, and drops him, a torn and bleeding mass, into the middle of the decoys. The alarming roar of black powder, and the cloud of smoke spurting from the gun muzzle—the tremendous push of the overcharged arm—all are diminished, and the load is left as death-dealing as before. The excessive load necessary with black powder—four to six feet being frequently a necessary allowance for the speed of a duck, is cut down to a few inches by the lightning speed of the nitro. There is less chance for a slight miscalculation in gauging the speed of a mark. Shooting is more deadly, and more satisfactory.

In selecting a duck load, every shooter starts out on the correct hypothesis that a wild duck is a compact little mass supercharged with life, and covered with a pretty effective coat of armor in his feathers. Hence a load to fetch him dead where wanted, must have greater penetration or striking force than is required for lesser game. It should maintain a close pattern, too, but if penetration must be had at the expense of pattern, it is better to sink a few shot in deep than a number to slight depth.

There is not nearly so much difference in loading nitro and black powders as some people suppose. The greater part of the nitro powders shoot hotter and harder if wadded with considerable pressure. The same thick cardboard and thick black-edge wadding that used to separate the powder and shot in the old black cartridges will give good results in the case of the nitros, or most of them.

The load of nitro powder to be used on ducks is an individual matter, and must be determined by the gun which is to burn it. There are some guns which should never fire nitro powder. It is an expensive product, and should be fired out of an expensive gun, simply because the high-priced arm is better made and safer. The cheap Belgian guns are abominations with any kind of powder. In general, it may be safely said that a load of three and one-half drams of nitro powder of the hulk kind, will give as good results as any excess of that charge in a 12-bore gun. Many light guns are too lively to shoot with any pleasure with even that load, and of course in such cases the charge has to come down.

Barring the boring of the gun, no one other factor makes as much difference in the efficiency of a nitro load as the casing in which it is contained. The same charge, shot out of a high-priced "Smokeless" shell will do work that can not be approached if loaded in a cheap casing. Many do not like to pay $1 per hundred for their shells and then throw them away, but the good article is worth 15 cents difference on the hundred, and if there is any sense in loading shells at all it is to be manifested by using the best of everything obtainable. The good casings with the more powerful primers will secure better ignition of the powder, and to the rapidity and thoroughness of ignition nitro powders owe their efficiency and speed.

As to size of shot, there is another factor which must in great measure be determined by the boring of the gun in which it is to be used. There are guns which will give a better relative pattern with fours than with smaller shot, and in their case, fours are the desirable size. Then again, given a heavy enough charge, there is nothing which will distance sevens or eights over decoys, where shooting may be had under 50 yards if time is taken.

Chilled shot gives better results with nitro powder than the soft, as it is harder and not so likely to deform in passage, as well as leading the gun less.

Wadding ought to be apportioned so as to allow of from a quarter of an inch to three-eighths for crimp. This last is an important factor in the successful loading of nitro powders, and it is a generally underrated one. As to the relative value of square and round crimps, there is practically no difference. If shells are to be reloaded, the round crimp is better, because it does not wreck the fiber of the shells as badly as the square turn over.

Topshot wads ought to be marked. It is a nuisance to tackle a goose at fifty yards with a charge of snipe shot. It generally hother the shooter more than the goose.

Notes on Small-Bore Rifles.

One of the most enjoyable sports within the means of people of moderate incomes is small-bore rifle shooting. It is inexpensive and fascinating, trains the eye, steadies the nerves, and the more proficient the devotee becomes the greater grows his or her interest in the pastime. Contrary to general belief it need not be confined to residents of the county and suburbs, but may be practiced by any one who has the use of a cellar forty feet in length.

The two calibres best adapted to target and small-game shooting at short ranges, say up to 200 yards, are the .22 and .25. The decision as to which of these shall be chosen depends somewhat as to just how thoroughly one proposes to enter into the enjoyment of the sport. The shooter who proposes to purchase ammunition ready loaded will decide upon an arm taking the .22 calibre rim fire ammunition, and for practice up to 100 yards will use the .22 short cartridge, which, for indoor practice, may be had loaded with smokeless powder, giving very little report. If, when selecting a rifle of this calibre, the purchaser chooses one chambered and bored to take the long rifle cartridge, the short above mentioned will work equally well in it, while for longer range work, up to 200 yards, or for small-game shooting he has a weapon which will take the long rifle cartridge, which contains a larger charge of powder and a heavier bullet.

For small-game shooting at short range the short cartridge is also made, loaded with smokeless powder and a hollow, pointed bullet, which, upon impact, mushrooms, or opens, and creates a wound equal to that of the solid ball of larger calibre.

So much for the marksman who wishes simply for the enjoyment of shooting. But those who wish to gain the greatest amount of pleasure from their practice will prefer to load and reload their own ammunition. The ready-made and the hand-loaded cartridge never occupy the same relative position in rifleedom as do the button power and the amateur who does his own printing and developing in the world of photography. Those preferring to join this latter class will choose the 25-calibre rifle, and, besides the pleasure mentioned above, will have also a rifle better adapted to hunting purposes.

In addition to the choice of calibre, one must also decide as to whether a single shot or a repeater is desired. A few years ago the repeater was considered less accurate than the single-shot rifle, but the former are now made with such care and have been so improved that there is practically no difference between them for target work. The repeater, however, owing to the rapidity with which a number of shots may be fired, has considerably the advantage as a hunting arm.

In twenty-twos, either a single-shot, the new Remington model, for instance, or a repeater, may be procured which will take any or all of the rim fire cartridges made in that calibre. In the twenty-five the best ammunition for the repeater is the 25-20, and for the single-shot the 25-25 cartridge. The former is what is termed a "hottle-neck" shell; that is, the mouth where the bullet is seated is of smaller diameter than the shell at its base. It may be loaded with varying charges of powder up to eighteen grains, and with various weight bullets, with the full charge of powder. It is at its best with a 77-grain bullet.

The 25-25 cartridge is preferred by some shooters, as it can contain seven grains of powder more than the 25-20, and, being a straight shell, is rather easier to load. It cannot be used, however, in repeaters of this calibre, and its greater capacity would be of no benefit to shooters on indoor ranges, as for such use a reduced charge of about seven grains with a bullet of forty-six weight should be used, on account of the noise and penetration of the full charges.

Tools are made by means of which the rifleman may load with precision any number of cartridges with such charges as he may desire, and then be readjusted and set for a different combination. Many shooters use a light charge of powder and a 46-grain bullet for indoor practice, a full charge or medium charge, with a 52 to an 84-grain sharp pointed bullet, for small game, and a full charge and a hollow pointed expanding bullet of seventy-five grains for game up to deer. The sharp pointed bullet makes a small, clean hole and avoids mutilating small animals, such as squirrels, while the hollow pointed bullet, expanding on impact, gives a terrific smashing force for so small a calibre.

As regards the cost of ammunition and appurtenances required, 22-calibre rim fire cartridges cost about as follows: The short, loaded with black powder, $2.64; loaded with smokeless powder, $3.31; with smokeless powder and hollow pointed ball, for game shooting, $3.57 per thousand; the long rifle, loaded with black powder, $3.16 per thousand; 25-20 cartridge, ready, loaded with full charges of black powder as supplied by the factories, $1.40 per hundred; 25-25, loaded with full charges of black powder, $2.10 per hundred. It is, however, much more economical to buy empty primed shells at 90 cents for the former and $1.70 for the latter and reload them for one's self. In estimating cost of shells, the fact that they may be reloaded a couple of dozen times should be considered.

Primers cost $1.20 per thousand, black powder about 30 cents per pound, and a quantity of smokeless powder equal to one pound of black costs 54 cents. One pound of powder will load 350 cartridges with 20 grains each. The cost of bullets will depend upon the weight of projectile used and the market price of lead.

A single-shot rifle of standard make may be bought in either calibre for from $5 to $10, or a repeater for from $10.25 to $12.50. These prices are for plainly finished arms. The same rifles, fancifully ornamented and checkered, but no better as regards shooting, can be made to cost up into the hundreds.

A reloading tool that will enable the shooter to use various charges at his own sweet will can be purchased for $3, while bullet molds are worth about 75 cents each.

A good arrangement for a bullet stopper for an indoor range is to mount the target on a wooden backing 4 by 4 feet, composed of two thicknesses of two-inch plank with a sheet of Russian iron between them, and at back of outside layer. This arrangement will stop a bullet from any cartridge that should be used indoors.

On account of its light report and freedom from smoke, smokeless or nitro powder is generally preferred to black powder, especially for indoor work, but in loading 25-20 or 25-25 ammunition, care should be taken to use what is called the low power smokeless powder, that is, one whose charge will exert the same pressure as the equivalent load of black powder. High power nitros, such as is used in modern small calibre military rifles, create a most tremendous pressure in the barrel, and one which 25-20 and 25-25 rifles made low pressure are unable to withstand. Nitro powder also requires a stronger primer than black powder, and "nitro primers" should always be demanded when purchasing materials for reloading the shells.

Never use a shotgun powder in a rifle cartridge. The charge of a shotgun slips easily through the smooth barrel of the shotgun, but the rifle bullet, expanding from the shock of an explosion, fits tightly in the rifle grooves, and offers considerable resistance. Rifle powder, which burns with comparative slowness, gradually overcomes this resistance before exerting its full force, but the quick-burning shotgun powder makes no allowance for this.

CARTRIDGE AND SHELL.

A rather amusing story is going the rounds just now. Several of the Eastern sporting papers have recently published obituary notices of Mr. Charles J. Jones, of Kansas, familiarly known as "Buffalo Jones." The stories were started by a column obituary in the New York Sun of the 17th inst.; shortly following the Sun printed a dispatch from Topeka, stating that Mr. Jones had read his obituary, but still felt well and happy, despite all the good things the press had said about him. He added that he hoped to live many years yet and to see the domesticated remnant of the buffaloes he has befriended provided with a home of their own by the government. It is the intention to ask Congress, through Mr. Curtis, of Kansas, to make a reserve of several thousand acres of land in New Mexico where he can continue his experiments in breeding animals that will be about one-fourth hison and three-fourths native cattle.

It is a common cry that game and fish wardens are no good, when as a matter of fact it is the people of the country themselves who are to blame for the amount of game law breaking that goes on daily throughout the country from the shore of the Pacific Coast to the Atlantic. Game laws are disregarded to a less degree than formerly, but still there is a great amount of illegal work in this direction that could be easily stopped, provided the people who witness these breaches of the game laws would only stand up for their rights and the rights of others, furnishing the wardens with such information as would lead to a conviction of a breach of the laws. The trouble is that neighbors don't like to inform on neighbors, fearing reprisals in the shape of burning barns or outhouses. About as far as they will go is to give a hint to the wardens, leaving those officials to hunt out the evidence for themselves. Again, it is an open secret that some wardens and their deputies are not fitted for their positions, but it is wrong to abuse a whole body of men for the faults of a few. As a rule the game wardens are men of a fearless nature, who go about their calling in a straightforward and honorable way, not sparing anybody, but carrying out the duties imposed upon them without fear or favor.

Hunting Notes.

Duck hunting conditions generally for a week past have not been favorable for the local sportsmen. On Sunday the sport was only fair on the Suisun marshes, the best bags being made by the Field and Tule Club guns. Shooters on the Sonoma marshes had but little shooting. A few good bags were shot on the Alameda marshes and bay shores. An exceedingly high tide enabled many hunters in this district to shoot quite a string of rails. Arthur Ballinger returned with a limit string. The best bunch of ducks brought in on Sunday were shot on the Spooney Club ponds between Mt. Eden and Alvarado, Lee Larzalere was high gun. Along the west bay shore marshes below this city duck shooting was desultory in returns to the guns. Further back in the hills the quail shooter was evident in fair numbers and with excellent success.

One of the best bags reported recently was shot by M. O. Fendner on the Stewart ponds near Denver, Solano county, 30 canvasback, 12 mallard and 8 sprig-tails, in splendid condition, was as nice a limit bag as the most ardent shooter could wish.

Market hunters continue to send in ducks from the Los Banos district and also from many points along the Sacramento river above Rio Vista.

Shooters have found thousands of ducks for some time past in the Yolo basin, among the tules and pot holes of the Clarksburg district particularly.

On Wednesday many city sportsmen were on the club preserves; in most instances fair shooting was the rule. Excellent hags were shot on the Canvasback and Field and Tule Club ponds. At the latter resort four members, Messrs. Roos, Hosmer, Bushnell and Harrison nearly all reached the limit bag. A tule fog prevailing, the birds would not work to decoys, shooting being principally flight shooting. A number of fat "cans" were included in the combined bag. These ducks were plentiful on the marsh during the week.

Reports from the hunting districts as to the shooting results on Thursday were only indifferent. The prevailing heavy downpour kept many sportsmen in the shelter of shacks, club houses and hotels.

Quail hunting last Sunday was good in many sections with an easy reach of the city; the best shooting was had in San Mateo county; in Marin county, near Point Reyes, Novato and Ignacio. Good bags were also made at many points in Sonoma county. Across the bay quail were found plentiful by hunters who visited the hills near Sunol, Pleasanton, Niles and Haywards.

English snipe have been fairly plentiful; sportsmen who kept posted on likely snipe patches have had some good shooting early in the week. Charles Fisher bagged 18 of the long-bills near Niles on Sunday.

The defeat of the commission dealer in the suit before the Superior Court this week was to be expected. The law in this respect is explicit and the principles involved have been adjudicated upon time and again with the same result. The only interest the commission dealers have in the matter is the sale of the game. They were to a great extent to blame for a laxity in looking after matters when the present game law was before the last legislature. The one of the few features of the law, as it stands at present, which is essentially good is the embargo placed on the commission cormorants. They are to blame more than anybody else for the stringent features of the game law. The prevention of open sale of quail is a provision that is a good one. Quail are sold and are to be had at the hotels and swell restaurants, we believe this positively, but would not like the herculean task of proving it.

ROD.

Interest in striped bass fishing is not on the wane. Last Sunday was an ideal day for an outing on the water. Many boats were out, but the catch was a small one. Messrs. Luttrell, Carroll, Pariser, Mead, Cunningham, Hollywood and Pariser were the lucky anglers.

On the Petaluma and its tributaries several fishermen found angling pleasant and successful. W. F. Shattuck, J. B. Kenniff and J. Rothschild fished at the Petaluma Gun Club resort. James Lynce, who tried the slough near Burdett's, landed six nice fish.

A gentleman and his wife who were trolling Sunday afternoon in a boat on the west side of Belvidere between the codfish wharf and Peninsula point, had the aggravating but exciting experience of three heavy strikes, in each instance the fish escaped. The lady had the first two strikes, heavy ones, but the bass in each case escaped before he could be landed. After a little badinage, usual at such times, the lady took the oars and the rod was handled by the gentleman. In a short time a big fish was hooked on a number five spoon. He fought gamely for a few minutes, in breaking water it was seen he was a fish of possibly fifteen pounds. Of a sudden the fish drove in towards the boat then turned at right angles—the line snapped at the swivel and the lost fish laid the foundation for another fishing yarn.

This incident reminds us that many anglers will tie the line and also the leader to the swivels and spoon with a square knot. This is a mistake and accounts for the loss of numberless fish and spoons. The line and leaders should have a loop, at least three-quarters of an inch long. The loop can be passed with a turn over the swivel-ring and when the sudden jerk of a hooked fish bears on the tackle there is less danger of a snapping of the knot, the strain being lessened.

One reason alleged for the heavy catches of striped bass by the net fishermen is that the practice of "chumming" is very much indulged in. The boats are sailed or rowed over likely water and large quantities of bait thrown overboard. The fish are thus led to favorable seining ground and captured in wholesale quantities. It is customary also across the bay to put out set lines for bass. Quite a number of fish are taken in this manner.

Jackson's Napa Soda cleanses the stomach and renders the eye clear.

Recent investigations on the life history of the salmon in fresh water, according to the last annual report of the Fishing Board of Scotland, claim to fully confirm a conclusion previously arrived at by numerous authorities, namely that salmon go to the sea for the purpose of feeding, and return to the rivers when they have accumulated their full store of nourishment, quite irrespective of the condition of their reproductive organs. The factor determining their return from the sea to the rivers is therefore not dependent upon the breeding instinct, but upon the state of nutrition.

As regards the source of the pigment which confers on the flesh of the salmon its distinctive color, the report states that, as is well known, the salmon while in the sea feeds largely upon the herring, and that the latter, in its turn, mainly subsists upon small, free-swimming crustaceans, many of which are of a brilliant red color; on comparing the coloring matter of these crustaceans with that of the muscles and ovaries of the salmon, it was found that in the case of certain species of the former the pigment was very similar to that of the latter; a common feature of this pigment in both crustaceans and salmon being its association with fat. In other groups of crustaceans the coloring matter was, however, more akin to that of the lobster, being found, as in the latter, chiefly in the external shell and its epidermis, and not in association with a colored oil.

The inference would accordingly seem to be that the pink muscles and ovaries of the salmon are colored by the pigment found in those marine crustaceans technically known as Capepods—in which it is associated with fat.

But what the ordinary reader will fail to understand is why this pigment does not stain the flesh of the herring, and what becomes of it while in the body of that fish. It seems surprising that such a very obvious question is entirely ignored by the learned scientists who have undertaken this very laborious investigation.

During a summer vacation of that institution a number of students at the State University, on information and discovery bent, found their way into the southern portion of Humboldt county, and finally sojourned for a short season at the Myers farm on the south fork of Eel river. The young men had already collected a goodly showing of the flora of that region, as well as some rare trophies of the beast, bird and insect species. In fact, they had acquired specimens more rare than had been obtained on similar journeys in other parts of the State.

But in the bed of the river near the Myers home the students accidentally discovered something unknown and unacquired in all their previous researches, a something the existence of which was unknown to even the dwellers along that stream. It was nothing less than fresh water mussels, which unlike the sea species of bivalve mollusks did not grow in clusters or on a craggy rocky formation, but were plentifully distributed among the small boulders and gravel in the bed of the stream.

The fresh water bivalves showed an entire absence of the byssus which is characteristic of the salt water species. Those taken were plump, of good size and the flesh perfectly white. Chowder prepared from them, when properly seasoned, was as fragrant and palatable as that made from the salt water species. These fresh water mussels seemed to move about in the sand and gravel at will.

The roving students had no knowledge of any similar discovery having been made in a California stream, and a number of bivalves were prepared to grace the museum of the State University. They are said to be quite plentiful in the river.

The Malay race is probably the most skillful in fishing, and the Philippine Islanders are not behind the other branches. One of their favorite ways of catching fishes which run along the bottom of rivers, bays, and arms of the sea, it consists of a long raft ranging from twenty to sixty feet in length and from eight to twenty feet in width. At the rear part or stern there is a platform, and on it a little house, in which the fishermen doze during the heat of the day and sleep at night. In the middle is a small furnace in which they do their cooking, and a jar in which they put fine fishes, and a tank through which the water moves where they store their catches. In the bow is a cumbersome but ingenious drop net mechanism. It consists of two long and strong poles fastened to the rafts on axes and by a rope at the upper end of the two, which here touch each other, running down to a windlass in the stern sheets. To the top of this juremast are fastened two enormous bamboos, crossed in the middle and bent so as to form semi-circles. The four ends of the bamboos are connected by a great hag net ranging from twelve feet to forty feet square. When used the fishermen throw a lot of bait into the big net, and lower the arrangement by loosening the windlass and permitting the rope to unwind. The masts rotate forward upon their axes, and the net sinks until it lies upon the bottom of the water. The fish, attracted by the bait, are soon crowding around the center of the net. The windlass is slowly turned, which raises the bamboos, then the rope connecting the ends, and last of all the center of the net. By the time the fish are alarmed the ropes have passed the water's edge and escape is impossible. With this ingenious mechanism a fishing crew will often take 1000 pounds of fish in a single cast.

THE FARM.

The Mule.

Mr. De Witt C. Wing has the following good things to say about the mule:

A strong, well-built mule, of weight, manners and training, can endure more work under more adverse conditions than a horse can.

A mule, under certain circumstances, has more intelligence than a horse; he won't run blindly into a ditch and thus break his neck.

A mule doesn't eat as much as a horse, though he may keep at it longer. He more thoroughly masticates his feed, a fact which the finely cut material in the excrement testifies.

As a rule the mule is more reliable in emergency cases than is a horse; he will do his best and keep on doing it whether the results come or not.

In plowing corn either with cultivator or double shovel, the mule, on account of small feet, will break down only one-third as much corn as a horse would under the same circumstances.

A mule is more careful than a horse. He looks where he is going, 'sizes up the situation,' so to speak, and acts with caution.

The mule is not apt to break down fences or break away when hitched as the horse.

The mule is a snarer-footed animal than the horse, and hence can make better headway over ice-covered roads.

The mule can endure more heat when working than a horse.

A young mule is easier to break than a horse colt. Occasionally a young mule is met that is exasperatingly difficult to manage and train for useful purposes.

The mule almost invariably retains his eyesight longer than the horse, and seldom loses it.

When fatigued the mule will recuperate quicker than a horse. His stamina and constitution serve him well under such circumstances.

When harnessed and started in the field the mule resigns himself to the task and conducts himself accordingly, not trying in every way clear to him to break something to get out of the job.

When once the mule is hitched up and started, he evinces less disposition to sulk or indifferently do his work than does the horse.

Working singly, the mule surpasses the horse, inasmuch as he can walk with more accuracy and manifest appreciation of what he is doing.

$45 for Coyote Scalps.

The sheep owners of the Montezuma Hills have clubbed together and agreed to pay $45 for each and every coyote killed during the winter of 1901-2 within the following boundary: On the west side by the road leading from Collinsville to Reardon's corner to Rio Vista, and on the east and south by the Sacramento river. The coyotes have become quite numerous in this section, have been killing many sheep and the sheep owners offer this reward as an inducement to hunters. Those who wish further information on the subject can apply to Dan McCormack, who was instrumental in getting up the reward.—Rio Vista News.

The class of beeves that is selling to decidedly best advantage on the Eastern market are the good handy 1150 to 1350 pound steers, while those weighing over that range have to go at prices comparatively lower. The first named sell readily at any time as they are always in demand from the dressed-beef buyers and can often be sold to shippers as well at very satisfactory rates. A study of weights and prices shows that the good handy weights can be most profitably handled, while on the other hand heavy beeves have to be banded with care, as the chances are always against them at the market. The demand for heavy beeves is on the wane. The day of the 1600 pound steer is past and it should be the aim of breeder and feeder to produce cattle that will mature early. With the butcher the demand is for a steer that will dress the largest percentage of meat to live weight, with quality of course taken into consideration. He no longer cares to handle the great heavy carcass with its big percentage of fat and offal.

Seductive Sirloin Steaks.

It is not very long ago, only a very few years, when the first shipments of American dressed beef were made to England. This meat was treated with the greatest contempt by the English beefeaters, and it was extremely difficult to get any dealer to handle it. For a long time all that was sold was palmed off as English grown beef. This prejudice at last was overcome, and now the demand for American beef has become so pressing that the beef producing interests of that country are protesting and demanding that the authorities shall take some steps to protect their interests. It is a hard proposition to meet for the seductive qualities of a sirloin roast or porterhouse steak from a fancy American dressed beef steer are almost equal to those of the sugar cured ham of the American Poland China hog which a Jewish rabbi snuffed in a restaurant and immediately forgot all about Leviticus and the Mosaic law and straightway fell from grace, sacrificing religion and nationality for a plate of cold boiled ham. Little will our side whiskered, red faced beef-eating English brother care where his beef comes from so long as it is up to his epicurean standard of tenderness, juiciness and flavor, for the marbled sirloin of an Iowa Polled Angus steer is a prettier picture to him than anything which our artists can paint.—Rural Spirit.

The Rambouillet offers the best type of mutton that can be found among merino sheep. In Germany it has received much recognition for its mutton value. This breed is in such demand by the farmers there that in the ram sales it is difficult for an American, wishing to purchase, to have as good a selection as he would wish. The Germans do not wish to let the rams go away. The average yield of wool is in the neighborhood of twelve pounds.

There was a great rumple on the Boston market the other day when the American woolen-mills company jumped in and bought 25,000,000 pounds of wool.

A CHANCE AT $6000 FOR $18 FOR YOUR FOAL BORN THIS YEAR

IN THE
Pacific Breeders Futurity Stakes
$6000 Guaranteed

For Mares Bred in 1900 Closed September 1, 1900.

A FEW SUBSTITUTIONS.

A few of the original nominators of Pacific Breeders Futurity Stakes ($6000 guaranteed) for foals of 1901 have advised us that, because of barrenness of the mare or death of the foal, they wish to dispose of their entries. The opportunity therefore presents itself to secure a $6000 engagement for foals of this season. If you own one or more whose dams you neglected to name when entries closed Sept. 1, 1900, you can now secure representation in this stake, and thus add materially to the value of your foals. The cost is but $18—$3 for the nomination, $5 for the January payment, 1901, and $10 for the January payment, 1902.

NOTHING MORE TO PAY BEFORE 1903

$2000 for Three-Year-Old Trotters.
200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Three-Year-Old Trot.
1250 for Two-Year-Old Trotters.
200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Two-Year-Old Trot.
100 to Owner of Stallion, Sire of Winner of Three-Year-Old Trot when mare was bred.

$1000 for Three-Year-Old Pacers.
200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Three-Year-Old Pace.
750 for Two-Year-Old Pacers.
200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Two-Year-Old Pace.
100 to Owner of Stallion, Sire of Winner of Three-Year-Old Pace when mare was bred.

The Only Opportunity that will be presented to you to secure so rich an engagement at so nominal a cost.

Remittance of $18, with color, sex and breeding of the foal, on or before January 1st next, is all that is required to add thousands of dollars to the earning capacity of your foal of this season. The few substitutions to be disposed of will be awarded in the order in which remittances are received. Prompt attention will secure for you this rich engagement.

A NEW CLIPPING MACHINE.

1902 CHICAGO

PRICE $15, F. O. B. SAN FRANCISCO.

"STEWART'S PATENT."

THE MOST PERFECT EVER MADE

A Revolution in Clipping Machine Construction.

INCOMPARABLY superior to anything previously manufactured at any price by any one. Surprisingly simple, strong and durable. No belts to slip, positive power. The teeth in large gear are cut out of solid metal (no cast) which must run easily and will wear forever. It has a rigid base, tubular upright, with a fine, strong crank handle, and unlike any other machine made it can be turned with either the left or the right hand. Each machine is furnished with the '99 Improved one-nut balance tension knife, which cannot get out of adjustment.

One of our customers writes us, after receiving the new machine: "Life is too short to fool away with my old belt machine. I can clip two horses now in the time it formerly took to clip one and I am not half as tired."

The owner, HON. JESSE D. CARR, Salinas, wants to sell them immediately. Is not in need of the money, but is getting too old (87) to keep on breeding Horses. Will sell one or more and will give any one a big bargain that will take them all. This is the best opportunity ever offered in California to get big values for money.

Cresceus Goes to Los Angeles.

Rather than take any further chances on the weather Mr. Geo. H. Ketcham, owner of the champion trotter, Cresceus 2:02½, cancelled his Sacramento and San Jose dates and ordered the horse shipped to Los Angeles last Saturday. Our advices from there are that he arrived safely Sunday morning, that the weather has been clear this week and that he would probably start there to-day rather than to run the risk of California winter weather by waiting until the date first fixed for his Los Angeles appearance, Thursday, December 12th.

Mr. Ketcham with his wife and daughter spent the time from Thanksgiving Day to the following Monday in San Francisco, and as luck would have it the fog and rain obscured the sun the entire time and led them to believe that "the glorious climate of California" is a myth. "The fellow who wrote that poem about California sunshine," said Mr. Ketcham, "is the same man that penned that other delusion 'A Life on the Ocean Wave,' and I am certain he was crazy." When we assured the genial owner of the champion trotter that but a very small percentage of California days were rainy and that sunshine was usually plentiful enough for a full bath in it at any time, he took a pinch of salt and swallowed with evident effort. And he did not lose his temper over the disappointment but took his family and went out on trips through the leading stores of San Francisco and spent here a goodly portion of the money Cresceus had earned for him else where. He was delighted with the city and its appearance and thought that could California have a fair amount of sunshine it would be a great country.

His stories about Cresceus are many and interesting. "He knows more about racing and how to win than I do," he said. "When Cresceus meets a horse that is not as fast as he is, he wants to loaf along, and although it may seem a pretty big story, I have seen him drop back a length behind, open his mouth and actually yawn, as much as to say, 'Well, this is easy.' But when the homestretch is reached he lunges forward like a steam engine and puts all the power necessary into his stride to enable him to win. You will notice in all his pictures he is standing in a position that gives one the idea that he is pushing or leaning forward. That is what he is always doing. In the stall he wants to go forward all the time when one is around him, and he will walk right over anyone that stands in front, and refuses to get out of the way. In his gait he is rather awkward and shuffling when going slow, but at speed there is no evidence of that. He stands 16 hands and a half inch and weighs 1065 pounds. He is in first class condition and I am very sorry that I could not exhibit him here in San Francisco." Asked as to the weight of the shoes worn by Cresceus, Mr. Ketcham stated that he carried seven ounces in front and five behind. His feet are very small for a horse of his build. He is not a handsome dress parade fellow, but was built for business and that business is to be the champion. He loves to race and to trot fast. When sent for a fast mile the great horse seems to understand everything that is going on and wants to defeat the other horse. No matter whether his running companion, Mike the Tramp, is ahead or not, Cresceus never loses heart but strives to the last bit of strength in his body to reach the wire first. It is very unfortunate that he could not have been seen in an exhibition in this part of California, and we congratulate the horsemen of Los Angeles and vicinity on their opportunity to see him go against time to-day or next week.

Silver Bow 2:16 Accompanies Cresceus 2:02 1-4.

That magnificent son of Robert McGregor, Silver Bow 2:16, has been released from retirement, as it were, and on Tuesday last was shipped to Geo. H. Ketcham at Los Angeles, whence he will accompany the champion trotting stallion of the world to Toledo, Ohio, and make the season of 1902 at Mr. Ketcham's farm at a fee of $100.

When the owner of Cresceus was in Sacramento, Mr. Geo. H. Fox, of Clements, this State, and owner of Silver Bow, went there to see the wonderful trotter that was sired by the same hero of the homestretch that sired his horse. In conversation Mr. Ketcham remarked that he wanted another McGregor stallion and after looking at Silver Bow's breeding, asked Mr. Fox to set a price on him. This Mr. Fox was loth to do, as he has a love for "the Bow" that is hard to measure by money, but an agreement was afterward reached in regard to a lease of the horse that was very satisfactory and will doubtless be profitable to both gentlemen. By the terms of this agreement Mr. Ketcham took charge of Silver Bow at Clements and will take him to Toledo entirely at his own expense. He will place him in the stud at a fee of $100 and give Mr. Fox one-half the gross earnings of the horse. He is confident that he can book 50 mares before the season opens. We are more than pleased that Silver Bow is to be given an opportunity. He has been almost buried where he was, but the good qualities of his get have attracted so much attention in the last few years, that many California breeders were preparing to send mares to him next season and there will be many disappointed persons who will read this announcement.

When Silver Bow was purchased in Kentucky for the late Marcus Daly and taken to Montana, it is well known that he was as fast at two year old as any of the aged trotters there, and for this reason he was raced against them. It was the wrong thing to do, of course. Silver Bow afterwards fell into the hands of P. J. Williams, who brought him to California. He made his record at Butte, Montana, in 1893, when he was a five year old, and in a race where he met Klamath 2:07½ and Ottinger 2:09½. Klamath won the race, but Silver Bow took the second heat and second money and was second in each of the succeeding heats. The fastest heat in the race was 2:15½ and the slowest 2:17. Klamath was driven to his best to beat Silver Bow and it required a strong effort on the part of "Cookie" to do it.

Silver Bow is a magnificent individual and with scarcely any opportunities to speak of has sired eight standard performers, among them Arrow 2:14 and Silver Ring 2:14½. His get are noted for their size, quality and substance and are very stylish roadsters. Mr. John Parrott, of San Mateo, at whose Baywood Stud so many prize winning horses have been bred by crossing his Hackney stallion Green's Rufus on trotting bred mares, asked for a price on Silver Bow last year, his idea being to secure a number of fillies by him to place on his farm. Mr. Parrott was attracted to him by his handsome conformation and great style. Silver Bow has more of the blood of Hambletonian 10 in his veins than almost any horse that can be named. He is by Robert McGregor, his dam Sadie being by Hambletonian 10, and his grandam being a daughter of William Welch, who was also a son of the Hero of Chester. The third dam of Silver Bow is the thoroughbred mare Eleanor Margrave by imported Margrave, the stallion whose blood flows in the veins of so many of our fastest trotters. No McGregor stallion could have been selected that is worthier to occupy a place with the renowned Cresceus than the overlooked Silver Bow.

Sir Albert S. 2:08 3-4.

The handsome photo-engraving which adorns our front page this week is a good likeness of the champion Pacific Coast pacer of 1901, Sir Albert S., son of Diablo and Effie Logan by Durfee. In some respects he is the most remarkable horse that has ever appeared on the California race tracks, and there are many horsemen here who are now predicting that he will finish his next racing season as he did this one, an unbeaten horse. He has started in just six races during his lifetime, starting at Sacramento on July 30th of last year in his first race of any kind. He won all his races in straight heats and the record of them is as follows:

July 30, Sacramento, 2:11½, 2:12½, 2:12.
August 3, Sacramento, 2:11½, 2:13, 2:08½.
August 29, Woodland, 2:11½, 2:10½, 2:11½.
September 7, Sacramento, 2:11½, 2:10½, 2:10½.
September 12, Sacramento, 2:10½, 2:12½, 2:09½.
October 5, Los Angeles, 2:11½, 2:09, 2:12.

No other pacer in the United States started a green horse and finished with as low and clean a record. Sir Albert S. is a very muscular and at the same time clean built horse and few pacers can outmeasure him. He stands 15 hands and three inches and weighs 1030 pounds. His measurements in inches are as follows: Girth 73½, arm 19½, gaskin 19, stifle 41, knee 8½, hock 9½. From point of hock to point of hip 41½. When Mr. Geo. H. Ketcham was in San Francisco a few days since he called on Mr. William G. Layng, owner of Sir Albert S., telling that gentleman that he would like to take a look at the California horse that was most talked of in the East this year. After a critical examination Mr. Ketcham expressed a very high opinion of the son of Diablo and offered to lease him for next season, but Mr. Layng declined saying he would either race him over East himself or sell him.

Average Better With a Few.

The old plan of campaigning a big string of horses is being abandoned by nearly all the leading Eastern trainers, and instead of going down the line each year with twenty or more, a half dozen is now considered a pretty good sized string. Ed Geers had but six horses this year, yet his winnings were as large as the years he trained a couple of dozen for the Village Farm. M. E. McHenry had but four horses in his stable this year and rates up among the heavy winners of the year. A few good ones are better than a big lot of indifferent horses.

In hot weather there is no drink like Jackson's Napa Soda—plain in a lemonade.

That Los Angeles Whirlwind.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 3, 1901.

EDITOR BREEDER & SPORTSMAN:—I note an item in your recent issue relative to the green pacing horse that Millard Sanders was trying to purchase. His name is "Stipulator" by Titus, son of Director. Stipulator is out of the dam of Coney so he has a license to be good. The writer told Mr. Sanders about him and later on introduced Millard to Mr. Wilson, the owner. This colt has paced a mile in 2:11. His owner agreed to show Mr. Sanders a mile in 2:09. After Mr. Sanders had looked the horse over, he made an offer of $1000 for a half interest, which was rejected. The same evening the writer and Mr. Sanders called on Mr. Wilson and spent several hours trying to do business. Mr. Sanders finally offered $2000 for a half interest, but all was of no avail, as Mr. Wilson had set his figures away up in the pictures. After furnishing high balls and low balls and all the persuasive language in our vocabulary we gave it up, and said good morning, for it was then 12:40 a. m., and the writer thought Mr. Wilson was a good bit like farmer Jones' bull when he got out on the railroad track and tried to stop a fast moving locomotive. When his owner, farmer Jones, looked at him he said, "Old bull, I admire your pluck, but got durn your judgment."

Mr. Wilson was offered $2000 for a half interest in an untried horse, and with the agreement that Mr. Sanders, who is beyond question one of the best trainers and drivers in America, was to handle and race him, besides owning a half interest in him. In the language of John Splan, "Tis a good time to sell when a good buyer is on hand." However, Mr. Wilson certainly has a young horse of gilt edge breeding, conformation, disposition, and a fair commodity of speed. Hope he gets a long price for him. As has been said in your columns of recent date, it is bad policy to put the price too high, and will add that good buyers don't hang on every gum tree in California.

Yours truly, C. A. HARRISON.

Has Two Fast Ones.

Trainer W. L. Snow, of Hornellsville, New York, who is now in California or on his way here on the lookout for good green prospects, is very sweet on the future of his pacer Council Chimes 2:07½. Asked about him the other day he said:

"There is one grand race horse. He finished the season in fine fettle, showing not a scratch or blemish after his hard campaign. He can travel faster than his mark would indicate. For this reason I scratched him in two races toward the close of the season, so as to have him eligible for the 2:08 classes next year. Council Chimes has a bright future before him. With fair luck he will win a lot of money next year. Dan Patch was the only horse entered against him that could make him lower his colors, and that Patch horse, you know, is a wonder. Yes, siree, Dan Patch is certainly a wonder. I don't think there is a horse in the world that can beat him in a race. Prince Alert is the only one that has, in my opinion, got any chance with him, and I doubt very much that Prince Alert can turn the trick."

When asked how the pacer Charley Hayt 2:07½ was coming along, he replied: "He is rounding into good form, and the bad leg is almost as good as ever. There is one of the speediest pacing horses in America, but up to date he has had hard luck. In 1900, after establishing a world's record (2:07½) for green pacers at Fort Erie, the horse went west to race in several stake events that he could not have lost except by accident. But luck was against him, and he went wrong and did not start in these races. His prospects looked bright for last year until he met with that accident, which compelled us to retire him for the season. He has all of his speed yet and will be heard from next season down the Grand Circuit."

There is a fashion in carriage horses as well as in everything else, and those who can afford the luxury follow the fashion in the change of which the carriage builder may possibly have a hand. Great size and powerful in spite of all we hear of good little ones, size, up to a certain point, at any rate means power—were the chief requisites in the harness horses driven by our grandfathers. The carriage builders of to-day can turn out a comparatively light vehicle, and the size of carriages has, generally speaking, decreased so that there is not the same demand as formerly for the big bay horses which looked so grand and imposing before the big old chariots.

MR. VERNON, N. Y., June 16, 1901.

Dr. S. A. Tuttle—Dear Sir: The goods received O. K. Enclosed please find check for $5, amount of the bill. Thanks for the condition powders. I gave them to a mare I have that is a poor feeder and she eats better, and I think they are a good thing. You can send me three packages of each: that is, three of the Worm Powders, three of the Condition Powders, and three of the Ointment. I am trying it on a mare that I am working on the track, that has cracked heels, and I think it is the best thing I have found yet. Her heels were quite badly cracked, and it has fixed them all right. She is a four-year-old, one of the finest looking mares any one wishes to see, 15-3, dark chestnut. My boy, 12 years old, drove her a mile to-day in 3:35, last half 1:13, last quarter 38 seconds, and I drove her the next mile in 3:35, last half 1:09, last quarter 33½ seconds, and I use Tuttle's Elixir for leg wash and body. Yours truly, B. F. RELYEA.

HIDALGO'S GOSSIP.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

NEW YORK, Nov. 24, 1901.

I suppose you have already seen, in this week's Spirit, a letter from Mr. W. Allison, the genial "North Yorkshireman" of that paper, concerning the Lester Reiff matter. It explains the matter so much better than I am capable of doing that I do not care to go over the same ground further than to say it corroborates about what I wrote you from London about six weeks ago.

I agree with Mr. Allison that there can be no jealousy of Americans, so far as owners are concerned, in England. If a man thinks he has a good horse for any given race, and a horse gets his nose to the wire ahead of him, he does not much care whether that horse was bred in France, England, America or Australia—all he knows or cares about it is that his horse was beaten, and that is enough.

But with regard to trainers and jockeys, I regard the case differently. When Mr Corrigan went over there he employed an English trainer, who was well recommended but performed so poorly that Mr. Corrigan was obliged to take charge of his horses and handle them himself. Now, it is an open secret that Mr. Corrigan has been informed he need not apply for a renewal of his license as a trainer, and that a similar intimation has been given out to Mr. Enoch Wishard; as a natural consequence of which both those gentlemen are now returning to these shores. Certainly, a man who is competent to train should not be compelled to hire others to do it for him, more especially when there are no charges of fraud or chicanery against him, and I understand there are none against either of the gentlemen last above named.

Now, how is it about jockeys? Certainly there was a jockeys' ring in existence there prior to the American invasion by Tod Sloan and those who sailed over there in his wake. When Wood and Loates were ruled off, what did they do? Did they seek any employment in other ranks of business? Not much. They lay around Newmarket, maintaining expensive places of residence and spending as much money on themselves and their families as they did in the days when they were popular idols in the saddle. It was the riding of Sloan, Rigby, Maher and the Reiffs that put those chaps out of business. Hence the desire to get rid of them as soon as possible. Knowing it could not all be accomplished at once, they were content to see it done by piecemeal.

Circumstances are tending toward the vindication of Lester Reiff much faster than he could have done it in his own behalf. The Doncaster Cup, for which he came second on Merry Gal, is two miles and a fraction; and the mare has since shown that a Suburban distance is a good deal more to her liking; and as for De Lacy, the horse for whose bad showing Reiff was actually ruled off, he has never gotten any part of the purse since the affair with Minnie Dee at Manchester. I was told the horse was one of those that would run well enough as long as he could run solely upon his courage but would shut up shop and go to church just as soon as he got a taste of the persuaders. As for the failure to win the St. Leger, I will swear that he had gotten Volodyovski at least a foot in front of Doricles when they passed where my wife and I were sitting, above 125 yards above the judge's chair. I will bet a hat that the instructions from Mr. Huggins to Reiff, on that occasion, were about like this, if not exactly in these words:

"You will understand that you have got the fastest horse in this race and can outpace them anywhere after going a mile. But he is just a trifle short of work and cannot live very long at the top of his speed. So you will not try to move away from them at the head of the stretch but make your run about 350 to 375 yards from home." That is the way Reiff rode the race and I know he always rides as he is told, throwing the blame upon the trainer in the event of a defeat. It is the way for any hoy to ride unless he is put up without instructions, a thing that seldom occurs.

No man has ever employed either of the Reiffs who cannot say that he "got a run for his money." What object could boys have in riding dishonestly when earning as big salaries as were paid to any of the Presidents of the United States prior to General Grant? What those boys are after, is a big salary and not a "divvy" from some hookmaker for pulling a horse. I am aware that Lester Reiff has a surly temper and sometimes gives curt answers to questions, his employers not excepted. But I shall die in the belief that neither he nor his little brother ever rode an intentionally crooked race. That each may have lost races that he ought to have won, through causes unforeseen, I do not doubt. Other competent jockeys whose honesty was never called in question, have done the same thing from time immemorial.

I cannot close this letter without paying a just tribute to Mr. Allison, whose frank and manly nature shows forth so clearly in all his writings. We met in London as utter strangers, but his was "the touch of a brother's hand" to the man from the far off Pacific shores. I can recall no other man whom I met during my four month's stay in Europe who impressed me as he did. He was dignified, without the slightest approach to hauteur; scholarly, without being pedantic, and he had all the boyish frankness of Bruce Lowe without his deeply rooted prejudices. And when I left the white shores of England behind me on the morning of the 8th inst, I felt that I had said goodbye to a man who was as gentle as he was earnest. After all, the true gentleman is simply a gentle man—one who unites a woman's tenderness to a man's courage. In these days when life is waning, the days of my youth come back to my memory, thick and fast. But side by side with them comes the sweet memory of my only day at Cobham where its genial master and his truly lovely family made the wayfarers from the sunset land feel so much at home, and divested exile of every pang. May happiness ever linger around that lovely home in the sweet Surrey hills, is the fond hope and fervent prayer of Matinee Racing at Los Angeles.

The Los Angeles Driving Club held a brilliant matinee on Thanksgiving Day. The rain storm, which was pouring out the vials of its wealth on central and northern California during that day, preventing the Sacramento club from holding a matinee with Cresceus as the chief attraction, did not extend beyond Tehachapi, and a southern California sun made the day perfect for racing. The attendance was very large and to break a record every box in the grand stand was taken and occupied. The sight from the infield was a beautiful one, as there was considerable dressing done for the occasion and many handsome toilets were shown.

The judges for the day were D. J. Desmond, H. M. Henderson and Lee Mahury. Mr. A. W. Bruner acted as starting judge, and the timers were Dr. G. L. Cole, Dr. H. B. Ellis and Dr. W. W. Hitchcock.

President Stimson gave his personal attention to to every detail of the day's sport, and Mrs. F. B. Chandler, the club's secretary, received a vote of thanks for the able manner in which she attended to her duties and kept a record of the races.

The defeat of Mr. Potter's heretofore invincible mare Primrose was the surprise of the day, but it was evidently not her day to shine and she was distanced.

The last race of the day was a contest from start to finish, and was a great event for Sweetheart, Mr. Potter's three year old pacer, who won a heat in 2:21½ and paced a dead heat with Bessie B. in 2:18½. How the judges awarded first prize to Bessie B. on the summary is hard to understand, as Sweetheart made the better showing.

Mr. G. B. Tihhott won the team race with Bastina and General Wiles, beating Red Line and Hanford Medium, who were second, and Sister and Bessie, who were third. The time was 2:34½ and should have been faster.

Mr. Felton's Montecito Boy won his race rather handsly, beating the favorite, Scappoose.

The first race was very cleverly won by Dr. Ralph Hagan's Jingle in straight heats. The summaries of the day's sport are as follows:

Sale of Thoroughbreds.

There was a wonderful difference in the prices received at the Occidental Horse Exchange thoroughbred sale Tuesday night for the yearlings by St. Carlo and those by Joe Ripley, and the result shows plainly what breeders must contend with. A tried sire, one who has proved his success in the stud is a profitable animal, while one whose success remains to be demonstrated cannot be expected to bring his owner large returns at the sales of his yearling produce, no matter how high class, individually, that produce may be. Of course, if the stallion is a young member of a very fashionable family, and the yearlings are from fashionably bred mares, they may bring good prices, but "the untried" is going begging in the horse markets of the world and probably always will. The rejected stone, however, often becomes the corner of the temple, and when a youngster of good individuality from a good family is sold for a song the buyer is generally a winner in the long run. At Auctioneer Layng's sale last Tuesday evening seven St. Carlos from Mr. W. O'B. Macdonough's Menlo Stock Farm brought an average of $1111.42, certainly a very profitable crop of yearlings.

At the same sale six very handsome and good-sized yearlings by the fast and successful racehorse, Joe Ripley, were disposed of. They brought a total of $620, or about $103 each, which is less than it took to breed and bring them to the auction ring. If these youngsters turn out to be racehorses and good winners, however, the sale of Joe Ripley yearlings next fall will be a different story. The summary of the evening's sale of thoroughbreds is as follows:

Yearlings, by Joe Ripley—Molly Brown, h f, $55, Mike Fox; Hyderferre, b c, $75, J. J. Coalter; Walter H., hr c, $70, Billy Abbott; Ripper, h c, $140, Gaylon Brown; Lightly, h f, $80, Fred Edwards; Joe John, ch c, $200, Sandy McNaughton.

Sold Under False Names.

An Eastern horse buyer says that it is surprising how many unidentified speed horses, that can show a 2:10 to 2:15 gait, find their way to the eastern markets. They are picked up in deals practically as green horses known to have a great hurst of speed. For a time the Eastern buyer fancies he has struck a green trotter or pacer that is a world heater. He imagines that some well bred colt was sold at some western sale by a farmer or perhaps a city breeder who had concluded not to train him, and had sold him to some dealer as a driver without any special reference to breeding. Hence the Eastern buyer hitches his green horse up and goes out alone and takes a spin on the road, and hy and hy along comes a friend and the green western horse pricks up his ears and hit the road a 2:20 clip or better.

He pulls up, goes home, and begins to train and get his new purchase ready for a few green races in the rural districts, just for fun. He enters in the slow classes; goes out and wins several races hands down. He discovers that the green horse can trot or pace below 2:15. It dawns upon him that he is in possession of an outlaw—a ringer, that through some unexplained cause found its way to the sale mart unknown to the buyer. He discovers that it is unsafe to keep on winning a few slow races with his new purchase. He quietly withdraws from the race course, takes his green horse home, explains the situation to some friend who is looking for a fast speedway horse and who don't care a cent for brooding or low marks, and the horse is sold and worn out on the speedway or road.

The Science of Inbreeding.

[By W. H. Rowe.]

Commando, Conroy, Nasturtium, Yankee, Heno, Blue Girl, The Parader, Gold Heels—thus runs the list of America's notable performers of 1901 whose pedigrees have recently been analyzed by me, and the readers of this journal have also been the recipients of my views upon those English juvenile celebrities, Minstead and Game Chick.

The careful reader will need no reminder that in each and every case we have encountered a most eloquent illustration of the potency of inbreeding, and I think I have also shown that the great bulk of the colts in the above select list are equally convincing exhibitions of the "colt nick," which is described by the Figure Guide as "returning to a stallion the best strains of his dam." So, too, does Game Chick clearly illustrate the reverse case of the Figure Guide's "filly nick," which may be described as "nicking the right hand side of the stallion's tabulated pedigree," or, in other words, by returning to a stallion the best strains of his sire.

I have been glad to learn that these series of expositions of the "colt nick" have made a decided impression in more than one section of the American breeding world, and I feel sure that the subject is one which merits an extraordinary amount of attention. I am not saying that all great stake horses are thus bred, but I do believe that the policy will yield—better still, is to-day yielding—a larger percentage of success than any other one definite theory or policy.

We have all read with wonder of the sale of an English two year-old for the unprecedented sum (for a two-year-old) of 21,000 guineas. This is the colt Duke of Westminster, who won for his erstwhile owner (Mr. R. S. Sievier) the New Stakes at Ascot and the Richmond Stakes at Goodwood, these being his only two public appearances.

I feel that I cannot enter upon a brief analysis of this unbeaten colt's blood lines without first noting that he is a sort of posthumous addenda, so to speak, to the many brilliant successes which were scored by the late Duke of Westminster as a breeder of thoroughbreds. The late duke was one of England's most scientific breeders, exercising every care in the schemes of his alliances, and it is therefore, in no way surprising that his comparatively small stud at Eaton was almost invariably represented by race course performers of the very highest class.

Mr. Sievier gave the prodigious sums of 10,000 guineas and 5000 guineas respectively for the filly Scepter (Persimmon-Ornament) and the colt Duke of Westminster at the sale of the Eaton yearlings in 1900, and the fact that both have won important stake events should in itself refute the silly practice of denying high priced yearlings just because they are high priced. The realization of such a huge sum as 21,000 guineas for the colt is in itself an equal refutation, however, and I am assured from a trusted English source that the colt is really a splendid race horse.

The pedigree of Duke of Westminster is a very important and significant addition to our present series. Not only does it support the policy of inbreeding in its general sense, but it specifically indorses the Figure Guide's "colt nick" with just as much convincing force as any other instance which I have quoted in past writings.

Duke of Westminster is by Orme out of Gantlet. Let us first analyze the pedigree of Orme, who was by Ormonde out of Angelica. His sire, Ormonde, was by Bend Or out of Lilly Agnes, she by Macaroni out of Polly Agnes by The Cure. Bend Or was by Doncaster, son of Stockwell.

Orme's dam, Angelica, was by Galopin out of St. Angela, she by King Tom (half brother to Stockwell) out of Adeline by Ion. Galopin was by Vidette out of Flying Duchess, she by The Flying Dutchman out of Merope by Voltaire.

Vedette's sire, Voltigeur, was by Voltaire, and Galopin was, therefore, inbred to Voltaire in two free generations. Thus:

GALOPIN	Voltigeur.....	VOLTAIRE
	Vedette.....	Mrs. Ridgway.....
		Hrdcatcher
		Nan Darrell
Flying Duchess	Flying Dutchman..	Bay Middleton
		Barbelle
	Merope.....	VOLTAIRE
		Julper mare

Let us now review the bloodlines of Duke of Westminster's dam, first repeating that the Figure Guide's idea of breeding great stake horses is to return the best strains in a stallion's dam. We are required to make very little progress in the pedigree of the mare in question before realizing how thoroughly Duke of Westminster conforms to the scheme, for his dam, Gantlet, is by Galopin, the very horse who sired the dam of Orme!

I have above outlined Galopin's inbreeding to Voltaire, and it is, therefore, obvious that this inbreeding is repeated to the practical extent of intensification in Duke of Westminster's pedigree by the close inbreeding of Galopin. This inbreeding will probably be more fully appreciated if I outline it in tabulated form, as follows:

DUKE OF WESTMINSTER	Orme.....	Ormonde
		Angelica.....
		{ GALOPIN
		{ St. Angela
Gantlet.....		GALOPIN
		Hors du Combat

There is another feature in which Duke of Westminster's pedigree is nicely inbred, however, and a glance at this may not be amiss. His grandam, Hors du Combat, is by Hampton out of Repulse. Hampton's dam, Lady Langden, was by Kettledrum, son of Rataplan, while Repulse was a daughter of Stockwell. Stockwell and Rataplan were full brothers. We have already found that Orme comes in the male line from Stockwell, and we must now note that King Tom (sire of Orme's grandam) was out of Pocahontas, who also threw Stockwell and Rataplan. This gives Duke of Westminster four strains of Pocahontas, but I am inclined to the belief, from what I have learned of the colt's individuality, that his merit was mainly produced by the "colt nick" to which I have above referred.

This is by no means the first successful result from similar inbreeding to Galopin, and the very best wish which could possibly be expressed for Duke of Westminster would be that he might duplicate the unequivocal success on the race course as a three year old which characterized the career of the horse whom I have in mind. This animal is none other than Flying Fox, who brought the unprecedented figure of 37,500 guineas at the dispersal sale of the late Duke of Westminster's stable.

Flying Fox was also bred at the Eaton Stud, and was likewise by Orme out of a Galopin mare. In this case we meet with an additional intensification of the male line which produced Galopin, however, for Flying Fox's grandam was a daughter of Rosebery, and Rosebery's sire, Speculum, was by Vedette, which horse sired Galopin!

Look at the inbreeding, as more plainly illustrated by a tabulation:

FLYING FOX	Orme.....	Ormonde.....
		Angelica.....
		{ GALOPIN by VEDETTE
		{ St. Angela
Vampire.....		Speculum by VEDETTE
		Ladylike
		Sarcasm

Let it not be forgotten that we have already found that Galopin was himself inbred in two free generations to Voltaire, the grandsire of Vedette! All this makes really phenomenal inbreeding in returning the blood of Orme's dam. To sum it all up, Orme has sired his two greatest sons, Flying Fox and Duke of Westminster, from mares who gave him a direct and unmistakable return of the blood of his dam, thus fulfilling beyond any cavil the teachings and indications of the Figure Guide's "colt nick."

Having thus written so uncompromisingly in favor of the "colt nick," I must allow no misunderstanding to prevail with regard to my views upon the subject in its entirety. I do not pretend to claim that all great racehorses are bred in this manner. The most which I claim is that the percentage of successful results appears to be in favor of the breeder, who will arrange his alliances upon the basis of the teachings of scientific breeding.

No hard and fast rules can be laid down with regard to a matter into which purely natural causes—over which we have no control and with which we may have no real acquaintance—enter so largely and vitally as they do into the breeding of the thoroughbred racehorse. The very best that any breeder can do (and, it seems to me, the very best that he should do) is to attempt to duplicate, in so far as lies within his power, the tactics which appear to yield the greatest percentage of successes in the long run.

There was a day when the mania for radical outcrossing had full sway, but I am inclined to regard one of its periods of comparative success as due, to some extent at least, to the fact that the operations at those times were relatively closer to Eclipse, Herod and Matchem than in our day. Having gotten further away from that great triumvirate, we need closer degrees of definite inbreeding to individuals or to distinct female-line influences. The season of 1901 is almost phenomenal in its illustrations of the efficacy of this policy, and I am sure it would be difficult to imagine a more eloquent or brilliant illustration than Duke of Westminster, to say nothing of his predecessor, the incomparable Flying Fox.

The unequivocal race-course successes of these two have no small bearing upon the intelligent consideration of Orme's stud success from another standpoint of the breeding problem, however. This is with regard to close inbreeding of a male line ancestor. The late Duke of Westminster mapped out two equally hold policies with reference to inbreeding in the arrangement of Orme's alliances. One policy was to return his dam's Galopin-Vedette blood at close range. The other was to breed him to Bend Or mares, thus returning his male-line descent from that horse. The former policy gave the mighty Flying Fox at the first attempt, and Duke of Westminster is comparatively early in following.

I think the best result of the other policy was Frontier, who won the Dewhurst Plate of 1898 and the Ascot Derby of 1899. In the latter year he was second to Flying Fox in the Eclipse at Sandown Park, both being three year olds, but "the Fox" left no room for doubt of his vast superiority.

Frontier's inbreeding:

FRONTIER	Orme.....	Ormonde.....
		Angelica.....
Quetta.....		BEND OR
		Dourance.....

But, says someone, this is a "filly nick." I don't blame anyone who raises that issue, and I may as well say at once that I regard such close inbreedings as either tail male or tail female as furnishing the leading exceptions to the rule for the "colt nick" or the "filly nick." As a matter of fact, I am inclined to regard those inbreedings as having a tendency to work diametrically opposite. It is, at all events, quite certain that close inbreeding to a common ancestor in tail male (as in Frontier) tends to be more successful in the case of colts than fillies; and, as I have said, we here find the leading exceptions to the rule which otherwise prevails with regard to the "colt nick."

Not considering this the appropriate time for an argument of that question, had I the space at my disposal, I leave the subject for the time being—not omitting to notice, however, that Orme's most conspicuous stud success continues to enforce the orthodox (so to speak) "colt nick," as demonstrated by the positive superiority of Flying Fox, and the probable superiority of Duke of Westminster, to Frontier.—Daily America.

Dr. Long, of Salem, is having Sam Casto to educate his stake entry, Star Ruby by Gerrome out of Kitty Norman, in the art of how to trot.

Dock Ward is taking care of L. Zimmerman's trotters McBriar 2:14 and Commodore Schley. The Commodore is a green trotter of unknown quantity, though it is said he can make the loop equal to his namesake. He stands about 17 hands high and those who admire size in the trotter would certainly be satisfied with this fellow.

August Erickson is spending most of his time on his Clackamas county farm this winter jogging Bill Frazier 2:14, Altacora and a lot of well bred youngsters. We are informed that his horses are all wintering well and that Bill Frazier, who has had a year's rest in clover, is in better condition than ever before. He eats up his own allotment of food and then rustles among the chickens for a share of their ration. August is thinking of writing a book on "Expensive Farming in Oregon."

J. W. Tilden, of Vancouver, Wash., writes: "Horses over here doing well. Eugene Blazier's pacer by Caution, dam Warwick Maid, is developing free-for-all speed, goes without hobbles and acts like a high class horse. Tom Condon's McKinney filly is also learning to trot quite fast. Have just commenced to break about the finest looking large weanling colt that I ever saw sired by Claymont out of old Florence R. 2:26 by Nutwood. The old mare looks like a youngster; Mrs. Tilden drives her every day and thinks she can reduce her record."

John Pender is busy this winter getting the Jones family together over at Irvington. He has Capt. Jones, the founder of the family, and a fine lot of his colts. Lady Jones, the winner of the Breeders' stake for two year old trotters at the State Fair this fall, is the oldest of the family. Alice Jones, a handsome looking yearling, large enough for a two year old, is an ideal filly in every respect. Col. Jones, another yearling, owned by J. A. Jones, of Springbrook, Or., is a blocky built fellow with lots of natural speed, just the kind for a good colt trotter. He is entered in the Oregon Stake of $1500 to be raced for next year. Ada Jones is a weanling, good enough to put in the show ring anywhere. They are a fine lot of youngsters, and if you don't believe it, ask John Pender.

Like all good things, Jackson's Napa Soda has a dozen counterfeits. Watch out!

EASTERN NOTES AND NEWS.

Harry Hamlin of Village Farm will spend most of the winter in Mexico.

Next year Atlanta, Ga., will follow Memphis with much increased purses.

John Splan bought Henrietta 2:12½ for Mrs. Dan McPhee, Dohling, Austria.

The winners of the past season were not all bred upon the large breeding farms.

Ernest Wilton 2:15 was shown three times in the show ring and won first every time.

It took eighteen cars, two weeks and over $20,000 to land the Bitter Root Farm horses in New York.

It is an item worth mentioning that the grandams of both Frank Bogash 2:03½, and Dan Patch 2:04½ were daughters of Pacing Abdallah.

The latest report from Toledo, Ohio, is that the major portion of the $75,000 needed for the building of a mile track has been subscribed.

Thomas Jefferson never beat 2:23 in a race, yet he won $47,000 during his racing career. How many 2:10 stallions have done one-half as well?

It is said that Sagwa, who was purchased for $7100 as a green trotter, was timed separately in a race at Terre Haute, Ind., in 2:10½, at the pace.

It is very poor policy to lance a swelling unless you are sure what it is. The knife and lance are instruments that should be handled with care.

The horses of the Spier estate sold at the Old Glory sale brought an average of $783. There were 119 head in the consignment and the total was $93,110.

M. E. McHenry will campaign Dan Patch 2:04½ again next year. A few races in the 2:05 class should soon determine how fast the son of "old Joe" really is.

In consequence of Ed Geers having sold his interest in Onward Silver 2:08, to J. L. Druen, the horse will be trained and driven next year by John Hussey.

An additional new one for Conductor 2:14½, the dead son of Electioneer, is Emma S. 2:21½, at Springfield, Ill., last September. She is out of Racket by Eghert.

Only eleven trotters entered the 2:10 list this year, the smallest number since 1896. Last year there were 14 new 2:10 performers, 18 in 1899; 20 in 1898 and 19 in 1897.

"So many pacers acquire records of 2:24½," says Bascomb, "that it is quite a distinction to own a side wheeler that is able to go through life without a mark."

A horse that, after repeated training, can not step off three heats in 2:25 or better, had better be relegated to the road. He is no good at the present day for racing.

Reports from Mexico assert that our southern neighbor is short of horses, and must soon look to outside sources. America is in a position to come readily onto the market.

The winnings of the Village Farm stables in five years was $270,000, an average of $54,000 per year. The horses met the best trotters and pacers the world has ever seen.

C. R. Bentley, the well-known turf correspondent, for a number of years connected with the American Horse Breeder, has recently become associated with the Chicago Horseman.

Sunland Belle 2:07½, pacing to wagon, well known to Cleveland matinee attenders, was awarded first prize in the class for speedway pacers at the New York horse show last month.

The well-known Columbus trainer, John Hall, has purchased of Mr. Sprague of South Charleston the fleet chestnut gelding Aster 2:12, by Dexter Prince, as a snow and matinee horse.

Possibly the two most trotter is coming, but if so, it will have to har' It has required ten years to come eight seconds. No other horse is yet able to sleep in Cresceus' blanket.

The treadmill work of jogging on the track—the same track—day in and day out, is not to be commended. The everlasting round discourages a horse, and often sours his disposition.

Ruhinstein 2:05, the fastest entire son of Baron Wilkes, is now a producing sire, one of his get, Willie H., a bay gelding, having taken a record of 2:27½ on October 24th at Raleigh, N. C.

There is a green young stallion at Seahright that has been the route in 2:12, half in 2:04½. He has no record and is by Advertiser 2:15½ out of the dam of Arion 2:07½. Rather fair breeding, this.

Horsemen seldom buy horses for racing purposes on their reputation for fast eighths, quarters or halves. Races are not won at these points. A full mile in fast time is a recommendation and three is a testimonial.

The Baltimore trotter Millard Sanders 2:17½, though he has been one of the busiest racers out in 1901, and a very successful one, began the season with a record of 2:17½, which he cut but a quarter of a second. This good luck is due to the fact that he kept close to the half mile tracks.

Twenty tons of catalogues were printed for the Old Glory sale. Each catalogue cost to deliver through the mail 52 cents, and the total amount expended for postage exceeded $1400.

Dr. Book 2:10 and the recently purchased Captor 2:09½ are to be used as a team, and should trot close to 2:10. They look alike, drive like one it is said, and should give C. K. G. Billings a chance for the championship.

"Jack" Wall, the California trainer, who for the past two years has looked after the horses belonging to Lemuel Hitchcock, has opened a public stable at Readville, and will not give his entire services to one man hereafter.

Something like thirty head of youngsters, the get of Grattan Boy 2:13, have been sent to Memphis, Tenn., by their owner, Mr. F. E. Marsh of Chicago. They will be trained some during the winter months. It will not be surprising if there is a Grattan boom coming, and a big one, too.

Globe Wilkes 2:19½ by Roy Wilkes 2:06½, who was not raced the past season on account of an attack of catarrhal fever in June, paced a mile over the Cambridge City, Ind., track November 1st in 2:10½. He belongs to H. Clay Knode. He ought to be a "warm member" in the 2:20 class next year.

At a recent meeting of the new Beloit (Wis.) Trotting and Fair Association, it was decided to hold a meeting next year and give purses of good value. The Beloit Association was organized last season and in six weeks built a track and stables and held a meeting which cleared $1500 above expenses.

A dispatch from Munice, Ind., says: "Dan R., the sensation of the Grand Circuit last season, who won many events at Memphis and Lexington, has been sold to Charles Preston of New York for $5000 cash. Two years ago the horse was bought as a common roadster for $60, and last season won $5000 and a mark of 2:08 as a pacer."

The late Marcus Daly owned at the time of his death 547 thoroughbreds and trotting horses. When the last of the trotters were sold at the Garden last week both branches of the Bitter Root stud were entirely dispersed. Excepting a few culls and hlemished horses disposed of in Montana, all have been sold at auction by the Fasig-Tipton Company.

A. H. Moore, formerly proprietor of the famous Cloverfield Farm, Colmar, Pa., and ex-owner of Director 2:17, Red Wilkes, etc., has begun suit to recover possession of that establishment, from which he was, he claims, forcibly ejected in February, 1898, by the Fidelity Insurance, Trust & Safe Deposit Co., of Philadelphia, trustees of his father, A. M. Moore.

Among other important matters to come before the Board of Appeals of the National Trotting Association will be that of the suppression of time, a practice that has become almost as common as that of laying up of heats. It is to be hoped that the board will not confine its jurisdiction to some little hush track, but will extend its investigations so as to take in some of the larger rings.

It is related of Little Boy 2:01½, to wagon, that when he first started on his racing career he would do the song-and-dance act up the stretch while the other horses were scoring, and would frequently get the word when the field was disappearing around the first turn. Walter Palmer cured him of the habit and made a racehorse that delivered the goods to him throughout the season of 1900.

David Cahill will campaign Charley Herr 2:07, again next season and in spite of the misfortunes of 1901 "Uncle Davy" is as much as ever convinced of the worth of his pony stallion. Charley Herr is now running out with the rest of the Cahill lot, including the 5 year old Alfred Starr that worked the Lexington track about the 2:13 notch, a fast clip for a green horse. Charley Herr will make a brief stud season next spring.

Senator J. W. Bailey, of Gainesville, Texas, says his two year old pacing colt, Bronson Cooper, will not be campaigned next season as reported. The youngster has been turned over to Harry Benedict, of Nashville, and will be reserved until his four year old form. The colt showed a trial mile a fraction better than 2:12, and if he goes on may develop into another Auduhon Boy. Senator Bailey is the owner of the great broodmare Rena B. that has four in the list at 13 years of age.

The well-known writer "Raymond" pronounces against mixed programs. He says: "The practice which is in vogue among the county fair societies of making their races open to both trotters and pacers is fast driving trotters away from their tracks, and it is possible that in the not far distant future, county fair racing will be restricted largely to pacers. Many horsemen have noticed the tendency of owners of trotters to fight shy of the associations which give the mixed programs."

The greatest prospect with which Geo. Starr had ever to do was Director General, a son of Director 2:17, for which the driver gave $4500 of his own money when the horse was barely broken to harness. He had shown a world of speed in his early education, and after Starr took him in hand trotted a quarter in 30 seconds, but a weak leg has put him out of business up to the present time, and for the last two years the stallion, now seven years old, has been in the stud in Kentucky. It is not surprising that his colts are trotting well, as the dam of Director General was a daughter of William L., the sire of Axtell. The chances are that next fall the stallion will be taken up and given a mark of about 2:25, and if he takes the work necessary to do this kindly an effort will be made to train him for turf battles in 1903.

Descendants of the popular Maplehurst stallion, Baron Wilkes 2:18, made a fine showing at the New York Horse Show last month. In Class 8, for two year old colts and fillies, Magnum by Baron Wilkes easily took first. In Class 10, for trotting stallions, Dreamer (3), by Oakland Baron 2:09½, son of Baron Wilkes 2:18, was awarded first, and Highland Baron, by Baron Wilkes, got third, the second being awarded to Belford, by Bow Bells 2:19½. All three of the winners in this class are the property of Thomas W. Lawson of Boston.

Sir Walter Gilbey, one of the foremost English authorities on horse breeding, says some hard things about the twentieth century thoroughbred and the present system of racing. In his recently published book on horse breeding in England and India he gives it as his opinion that "the modern race horse is a machine constructed for no other purpose than to win races, which do not afford proper tests of the qualities wanted in horses. In a word, our English thoroughbred may be defined as a racing and gambling machine, pure and simple. He is no longer suitable for cavalry mounts, being too light and leggy."

Thayer's The Bondsman, that was so remarkably fast but too unsteady for his owner to get him keyed up to a race and ready to go the route, will make a limited season next year at W. W. Estill's Elmwood Farm. The Bondsman is one of the handsomest horses in the country. He is by Baron Wilkes 2:18, dam Sorrento by Grand Sentinel. Sorrento is in the great broodmare stable, being the dam of Lady Bird 2:26½, Eola 2:19½, Iowa Sentinel 2:29½ and Jay Hawker 2:14½. The Bondsman will be driven to pole with the farm stallion Red Chute 2:20 in the daily exercise which is given horses in the stud.

Clem Beachy has purchased from Frank D. Spottswood, of Harrodsburg, on private terms, the five year old bay mare Dulce D'Or by Baron Wilkes, dam by Nuthrecker, second dam by Red Wilkes. She is one of the brightest prospects in the Beachy stable for next season. The mare has been in Beachy's hands all the year, and before the close of the season she worked a mile in 2:10 and seems to be one of the very fastest in the green class. The six year old Expedition mare, Alliewood, has also trotted about the 2:11 notch and is also a green mare. These two, with the rest of the Beachy string, are wintered in his training barn at the Lexington track.

George Bodimer has returned from Europe and is spending his vacation at East Aurora. He trains for the owner of Caid 2:07½. Consequently was behind that horse in all Caid's grand races in Europe. Caid was again the best horse in training last year, and his victories helped in placing Bodimer second in the list of the winning reinsmen on the other side. Princess Nafta by Prince Warwick is in Bodimer's string also. She is clearly the champion of the European bred trotters. Every year she has led all horses of her age and since her two year old form has won at least $60,000. She has a record of 2:15½ from a standing start, and W. B. McDonald says that if brought to America Princess Nafta would beat 2:10. She is a natural horn trotter and races often without a hoot.

In regard to the weight of speed wagons a prominent New York wagon builder says: "Ask any road driver what his speed wagon weighs and the chances are he will say about fifty-five or sixty pounds. As a matter of fact very few wagons seen on the Speedway weigh less than eighty pounds, and this stripped, or without shafts, cushion or carpet. In the matter of weights the carriage builders of today have not so much to boast about. More than thirty years ago I saw an end spring wagon, with high wheels and coal box body, which weighed complete, with shafts, pole and neck yoke, only ninety-nine pounds. The weight of the wagon stripped was only seventy-seven pounds and eight ounces, the weight of the shafts eight pounds and six ounces, and of the pole and yoke thirteen pounds, two ounces. This wagon was built for Louis L. Lorillard as the result of a wager.

The possibilities of young trotters were brought forcibly to the public attention during the season just closed by the brilliant showing made by the two year olds, Prelatess and Oxford Boy, and the three year olds, Peter Stirling and Hawthorne, not to speak of others of the ages named that have gone into winter quarters as stake winners. Peter Stirling annexed over $15,000 to his credit by winning the Futurity and another stake at the Lexington meeting, and Hawthorne also brought her owner the snug sum of $6000. Oxford Boy won the $5000 Futurity for two year old trotters at Lexington, while Prelatess captured the Lexington stake of the value of $2000, and closed the season the champion two year old of the year. It will, therefore, be seen that breeders and buyers of trotting stock are constantly on the lookout for colt trotters, and the sires and dams of colt trotters.

Says C. M. Bixby the New York turf writer: "Some of the men who chronicle events on the Speedway have long been in the habit of attributing wonderful performances to the various stars seen regularly on that great resort for the gentlemen who find one of their chief pleasures in friendly brushes over the magnificent course. Quarters in 30 seconds and halves fast enough to stop all the watches in Greater New York are daily recorded. There is no denying the fact that the greatest flights of speed to be seen in the world among the harness horses to wagon are to be witnessed on this drive, but it is manifestly unfair to Father Time to knock him down and out with ruthless hand so often every week. There are very few horses that can step quarters in 30 seconds, even under the most careful preparation, and when it is considered that the facilities for timing the Speedway brushes are at the best inadequate, so far as accuracy is concerned, these oft repeated statements naturally become wearisome."

ENTERPRISING AND ENERGETIC are the managers of the associations in Oregon and Washington. They had a grand lot of racing up there this year and are already at work with a resolute endeavor to improve on it in many ways in 1902. A meeting representative of the leading organizations in those States will be held at Seattle next month, when a circuit will be arranged, purses and stakes agreed upon and announced, and notice given to the horsemen as to what they may expect in the way of classes and purses next season. Those northern associations have directors and secretaries who are, to use a homely expression, "on to their jobs." Instead of sitting down and doing nothing all winter, waiting for something to turn up, they are actively at work and soon after the new year opens will have a program arranged that will put horses in training all over the northwest and cause trainers and owners to begin making arrangements to race for them. Last Tuesday in Chicago a meeting was held of secretaries and representatives of the various State fairs and harness racing associations in the Mississippi valley, and racing dates were talked over, agreed upon and will be announced within a week or two. California associations we hope will soon realize that it is the early announcements that bring good entry lists. How can California horsemen be expected to expend money in training unless they have some assurance when and where they will get an opportunity to race? The early announcements of the Oregon and Washington associations will cause quite a number of California trainers to head northward in the spring although there is not one but would rather race his horses here at home if there were purses to race for. We have great hopes for a good circuit in California in 1902, but to make it what it should be announcements of dates cannot be delayed until after January.

PREMIUMS FOR CATTLE should be larger at our California fairs than has been the rule in recent years. This State is destined to be one of the greatest cattle breeding sections of the world, and our district and State boards can do no better missionary work next year than to increase the premiums offered for the best breeds of cattle. Beef and dairy products will be among our chief exports in the near future and the sooner they approach perfection, the sooner will the export trade assume large proportions. Our State Fair last year gave but $40 as the premium for best bull of any age. This prize should not be less than the sum paid out for a race for selling platers which is usually $250. We will admit that the race will attract more people at fifty cents per head, but which will do the greatest good to the State? It is the opinion of many well posted cattle breeders, that a prize of $250 for the best bull of any breed, $150 for the best cow and $500 for the best herd of not less than ten members, would attract the largest display of cattle that has ever been seen in the State. If it did, the display would increase the gate receipts during the time of the fair much more than the $900 it would cost. The premiums offered for cattle can be increased all along the line with profit, but if the board cannot see its way clear to do this, it can make at least three sweepstake prizes on the plan above offered that will return a good profit on the outlay, and make the annual fair more of a favorite with the stock breeders of the State. They are certainly entitled to more consideration than the owners of skate race horses.

VENDOME STOCK FARM will sell at public auction on Monday, December 16th, a number of fine broodmares, some of them producers, the others young and elegantly bred, and all in foal to McKinney 2:11 and Iran Alto 2:12. James W. Rea, the proprietor of Vendome Stock Farm, intends to devote his magnificent farm to pasturing dairy cattle and therefore desires to dispose of these mares. He has put their sale in charge of the well known live stock auctioneer, William G. Layng, who will sell them at the Occidental Horse Exchange in this city, Monday, December 16th. Among the mares to be sold is the famous Ydrel, dam of Thos. R. 2:15 and Linda Oak 2:28½ and grandam of Dr. Frasse 2:12½, Dr. Frasse's Sister 2:25½ and Vendome 2:21½. Ydrel is by the famous Nutwood, is a great individual and is in foal to Iran Alto, so the produce will be a full brother or sister to Thos. R. 2:15 and the great broodmare Linda Oak. The sale will give breeders an opportunity to secure some very fashionably bred mares, and in addition a number of well bred and handsome colts, fillies and roadsters will be sold. Catalogues will be ready next Monday and the horses will be at the yard on Friday, December 13th.

ATTENTION is called in this issue to the announcement of the Sixth National Stallion Race for 1903 and to the Sixth Matron Stakes for 1904, offered by the Westchester Racing Association. The stallion race is for foals of 1901, the progeny of stallions duly nominated, to be entered by midnight of Tuesday, December 10, 1901. The Westchester Association adds $4000 to the stakes and the distance is the last five furlongs of the Eclipse Course. The Sixth Matron with $10,000 added is for foals of 1902, the produce of mares covered in 1901, to be run for by then two year old at the Autumn meeting in 1904. This event is to be run in two races, one for colts and geldings, the other for fillies. Subscription for mares to close at $20 each or only $10 each if the money accompany the entry. This event also closes at midnight on Tuesday, December 10, 1901. Breeders should not fail to contribute entries to both of these events, as they are not only valuable but also enhance the value of any nominations which may be made to them.

THE LAST OPPORTUNITY to name a foal of 1901 in the $6000 Breeders Futurity will pass on January 1st. On that date the third payment of $10 is due in the stakes for mares bred in 1900, and until then those owning mares that died or failed to produce last year have the right to substitute another foal without regard to ownership. This payment of ten dollars is the last to be made before 1903, and there are a few who made nominations in the stake who through loss of their mare or foal do not desire to keep up the payments further and are willing to transfer their nominations at the original cost—$18. This presents an opportunity for those having foals of 1901 that have not been entered in this stake, to secure entries for them. A $6000 engagement for $18 is an opportunity that owners of weanlings should not fail to take advantage of. Read the advertisement in this issue, where all the particulars will be found.

THE OCCIDENT STAKE for 1904, which is for foals of this year, will close January 1st. This stake should be the largest ever trotted for in California, as the stake of 1903, with the third and fourth payments still due, is already worth $2220. The 1903 stake had 98 original entries and the one of 1904 entries for which close January 1st, should have more than one hundred, and twice that number ought to be made. The Occident Stake is California's three year old classic, and the winner of it is always considered one of the most valuable youngsters of the year in the entire country. Breeders owe it to themselves and the business in which they are engaged, to see that their stallions and their farms are represented in it, as the winning of it by their produce adds value to the stallion and the farm that produced the winner. The conditions of the stake appear in our advertising columns to-day and should be read by all.

BOOKMAKING ON HARNESS RACING is receiving attention from the Eastern writers on trotting horse affairs. Its evils are pretty well set forth by C. M. Bixby as follows: "The fact is, notorious that the books made in the heats of trotting and pacing contests are the tightest propositions ever known to any racing game. Without any outside information, the layers should have all the best of it and never quit a meeting loser. But with the aid of stable tips as to the intentions of owners and drivers they have a 'graft' not excelled by the seductive but deadly fatal shell game. On the running turf the layers of odds are constantly battling against a world of wise money, which they accept in large portions, and only the most scientific study of details and the closest application of business principles allow them to weather the storms. And even under the most studious application of these principles scores of them are swallowed up in the whirlpool of wild speculation every season. But who over heard of a book of any stability to start with on the trotting turf going to the wall? The simple truth is that in order to work any reform in this direction the heat books must be eliminated entirely. This would be the greatest protection ever accorded to small bettors, and by forcing them to confine their operations entirely to results would place them on the same plane with the men who hack their best judgment and knowledge to win thousands to a race. That shrewd turf follower, Andy Welch, has a plan in mind which he says he will introduce next season, which does away with the "air tight" features of heat books. It resembles the old Paris mutual system, where men bet against each other, the winner paying a moderate commission to the parties who handle the money. Such a scheme is free from the taint of all suspicion, and would be a beneficial change from the present method. Perhaps it remains for the enterprising Hartford man to take the first step toward the reform so earnestly demanded.

THE CALIFORNIA HORSEMAN is the title of a neat little journal which the popular veterinary dentist, Ira Barker Dalziel, has begun publication of and will issue once a month. It contains many items of interest to horse owners and dealers and is very handsomely printed.

THE HORSE SHOWS in the east are proving greater successes and more popular than ever. It is time San Francisco had another. There is no doubt that it would draw a very large attendance.

A 2.05 Pacing Class.

It looks now as if a 2:05 pacing class would be one of the star events of the Grand Circuit meetings next season, and at the coming meeting of the stewards of the circuit the project of giving a suitable purse for such horses is certain to come up, with a chance in favor of the plan being carried out. It will, of course, be argued by some that if Dan Patch retains his form the other horses eligible to a 2:05 class would have but little chance against the son of Joe Patchen, but this objection to the idea that has already been put forward might, with a good deal more propriety, be made as to Direct Hal in the green pacing classes, as the last named horse has paced a public mile in 2:06½, and a half in a minute, which latter rate of speed has never been shown by Dan Patch for the same distance, although, of course, those who have seen him race have no doubt of his ability to do the trick.

Again, it should be remembered that Dan Patch will make a stud season in the spring, which fact militates against the success of any stallion as a campaigner, and, in addition, there are a number of horses eligible to a 2:05 class that look to have a chance to beat him even if he retains the form shown in 1901. Here is a list of pacers that would be likely to enter in such a purse: Daniel 2:05½, Sir Alcantara 2:05½, Audubon Boy 2:06, Little Squaw 2:06, Royal R. Sheldon 2:04½, Dan Patch 2:04½, Roan Wilkes 2:04½, Chehalis 2:04½, Indiana 2:04½, Edith W. 2:05 and Harold H. 2:04, and if no accident happens him this winter, the California pacer, Sir Albert S. 2:08½, will be entered in all the classes on the Grand Circuit to which he is eligible.

League of Amateur Driving Clubs.

The annual meeting of the League of Amateur Driving Clubs was held in New York on Tuesday, November 26th.

Five of the clubs in membership with the League were represented as follows: H. K. Devereux, Cleveland, O.; Harry Darlington, Pittsburgh, Pa.; C. K. G. Billings, Chicago, Ill.; Horace White, Syracuse, N. Y., and T. L. Quimby, Boston, Mass.

The only club not represented was the Columbus, O., Driving Club.

The old Board of Officers and Directors were re-elected as follows: President, H. K. Devereux, Cleveland, O.; Vice-President, Harry Darlington, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Secretary-Treasurer, T. L. Quimby, Boston, Mass. Directors: C. K. G. Billings, Chicago, Ill.; Horace White, Syracuse, N. Y., together with the officers above named.

The treasurer's report was read and approved.

After an informal discussion of matters pertaining to the interest and welfare of the League the meeting was adjourned sine die.

May Joy Attend Them.

SULKY NOTES.

Creseus has gone to Los Angeles.

What association will be the first to announce a program for 1902?

The Napa track is being put in shape and will be ready for early work in the spring.

Ed Lafferty is jogging three of the get of Silver Bow at Pleasanton and will race two of them next year.

Monroe Salisbury has returned from Nome, and we are sorry to say he did not find his trip very profitable.

Phoebe Childers 2:10½ brought $1100 at the New York sale this week. John Cockerill, of New York, was the purchaser.

Get your stallion's name in the California Stallion Directory, which will appear in the holiday issue of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

Dan Lawrence is handling a number of James Madison colts and fillies for Mr. Lopez on the Merriwa Stock Farm, near Pleasanton.

Toggles 2:08½ may be started at the Christmas matinee of the Los Angeles Driving Club by his owner, Graham E. Bahcock of Coronado.

Zoo Zoo, that took a trotting record of 2:23½ at North Yakima this season is by Bozeman, son of Mambrino King, dam Zephyr by Maxim.

If the weather is clear the lovers of the harness horse at Los Angeles will give Geo. H. Ketcham and his champion stallion Creseus 2:02½ a great reception.

Anita 2:23½, the gray pacing mare by Mambrino Wilkes, is for sale. She is a fine roadster and can lower her record considerably. See advertisement in this issue.

Old Altamont has forty-six 2:30 performers to his credit, seven of which are in the 2:10 list; a pretty good showing for a stallion that has spent his life in the wild and woolly West.

There is talk of the old Northern California Circuit being revived next season with Redding, Red Bluff, Chico, Willows and Marysville in line, purses to range from $300 to $500. It would pay.

A $2000 stake for pacers of the 2:11 class will draw many California horses of that class to the Oregon State Fair next year unless there are inducements offered for them to stay in this State.

Barney Judd is training a lot of roadsters and racing prospects at the Hoolulu Park track on the island of Hilo, H. I. These horses were purchased here by Mr. Geo. S. McKenzie, manager of the Volcano Stables.

The youngsters by Robert Brown's fast stallion Meridian 2:12½ are such a uniform and handsome lot, that a majority of owners are already making arrangements to breed the mares back to him in the spring.

Peter Stirling, the world's champion three year old trotting gelding, winner of this year's Kentucky Futurity, brought $9200 at the New York sale and was purchased by the veteran road driver Frank Work.

Bertha Derby, a five year old brown mare by Chas. Derby out of Bertha by Alcantara, therefore a full sister to Diablo 2:09½, was sold at the Marcus Daly sale in New York for $450. Mr. J. H. Shultz was the purchaser.

The consignment of Mariposa Stock Farm, Pawtucket, Rhode Island, to the Old Glory sale comprised 26 head and the total received was $6990. An average of $268.86. They were nearly all two and three year olds by Sable Wilkes.

Messrs. E. J. Tranter of Buffalo and W. L. Snow of Hornellsville, New York, were due to arrive in California this week on a combined business and pleasure trip, and incidentally are supposed to be on the lookout for a few high-class green trotters.

Joe Cuicello is now located at 605 Golden Gate Avenue, and will not take up any of his horses to train until after the first of the new year. He has several of the get of Seymour Wilkes 2:08½ that he thinks ought to win money and get low records if raced.

Valentine 2:30, the big trotter by Boodle 2:12½ that was purchased two years ago by H. K. Devereux of Cleveland, who reduced his record to 2:20 at a matinee, won the "highly commended" ribbon at the New York Horse Show in the class for trotters with records of 2:30 or better. There was a very large entry list in this class.

In the consignment from the Mariposa Stock Farm, Pawtucket, R. I., to the Fasig-Tipton sale at New York was a three year old colt by Conductor, son of Electioneer and out of Rosa Sprague, the dam of McKinney 2:11½. There must have been something the matter with this colt, as he brought but $195. James Butler was the purchaser.

Will R. Welch of this city recently received a letter from D. M. Shank of North Yakima, owner of the mare Diodine 2:10½, in which the full breeding of the mare is given. She is by Diablo 2:09½, first dam by Secretary 28:378, son of Director 2:17; second dam by Auctioneer Jobnie, son of Geo. M. Pateben 31; third dam by Napa Rattler, son of Biggart's Rattler; fourth dam by imp. Leviathan. While Diodine is not fashionably bred on her dam's side, she gets a lot of stout blood in her veins, from that source. It is said she worked a mile in 2:07 this year.

Silver Bow 2:16 by Robert McGregor will be a companion of Creseus 2:02½ at Toledo next year, Geo. Ketcham having leased him from Geo. Fox of Clements. Silver Bow will stand at $100 and as an individual is a handsomer horse than the champion.

San Jose will be quite a horse centre next spring, and there will be more stallions in service there than at any track in the State. The Eastern stallions Alcyo, Pistol and Barondale will all be located there, besides probably a dozen or so California bred horses.

F. M. Hammett, the well known horseman of Salinas has removed to Watsonville with his family and will open a training stable there for colt trotters and pacers. Mr. Hammett thoroughly understands colts and is an excellent trainer and conditioner. As there is quite a revival in horse interests at Watsonville he should do well there.

Two high class mares are offered for sale in this week's issue of our paper by Dr. Gurry of Sacramento. One is by Stamboul 2:07½ out of a mare by Abbotsford 2:19, and was bred to Zombro 2:11 last spring. The other is her filly by Zombro and is entered in both the Stanford and Occident Stakes for 1902, although she has never been trained.

P. W. Hodges shipped his stable of horses from Pleasanton to Los Angeles this week. He took eleven head with him, including the three Directum colts belonging to Judge W. E. Greene, of Oakland, and a full brother to the roan pacer Funston that Sandy Smith took East last spring. This is also a roan and is owned by Mr. G. W. Theurkauf, of Santa Clara county.

Creseus will start against his record at Los Angeles, December 12th. From thence he goes to Tucson, where he will start on the 19th, and thence to Albuquerque on Christmas Day. He will journey from there to the Texas towns of Dallas, Austin, Waco and Dennison and thence to New Orleans. The managers of the Charleston, South Carolina, exposition desire a date for the champion after New Orleans.

Rey Direct 2:10 will be sent to the stud at Los Angeles for the season of 1902, consequently he will not be raced next year. A number of very high class mares have been booked to Rey Direct already by Los Angeles breeders and there is no doubt but his book will be full there early in the season. No stallion in California can show a more uniform lot of good looking and good sized colts and fillies than he.

B. S. Krehe made a trip to San Jose last week and engaged stall room at the race track there for his two stallions, Alcyo 2:10 and Pistol, son of Launcelot. Like Mr. Durfee he rented a block of stalls with a paddock in the rear, and will have excellent accommodations for his horses. Mr. Krehe informs us that he will stand each of these stallions at $100 for the season. He will take them to San Jose in January.

E. E. Smithers, of New York, offered $20,000 for Lord Derby 2:06½, the day he defeated Borlma, but the offer was declined. Mr. Smithers was at the New York sale and got the horse for $10,500. Several wealthy men who failed to reach the sale in time to bid on the horse, offered Mr. Smithers advances on his purchase, and before night he had himself refused an offer of $20,000 for the son of Mambrino King.

The average for the Marcus Daly horses at the New York sale was $743.34 each. Of the 231 head catalogued, but four were unfit to enter the salesring, and the total amount received for the 227 sold was $168,740. Five stallions brought $18,250. One hundred and thirty-five mares and weanlings brought $83,110, averaging $615.64 each, and eighty-seven yearlings and two year olds brought $67,380, averaging $774.48 each.

Mr. H. E. Mulcahy, who sent his mare Algonetta 2:14 and his pair of roadsters by Eros to the Old Glory sale, did not realize very satisfactory prices, as they could have been sold for considerable more money right here at home. Algonetta went to Mr. C. G. Quintard of Sound Beach, Conn., for the low price of $310, while the team, Algoner and Eudora were sold for $500 to Mr. J. R. Raymond of Stamford, Conn.

The consignment of 48 head of trotting bred horses from the Hamlin's Village Farm, brought a total of $31,655 at the Old Glory sale, an average of $660 per head. The horses that brought one thousand or over were Lord Derby 2:06½, $10,500; King Charles, a green pacer by Mambrino King, $2050; Pilot Bell, a green trotter by Cbimes, $1025; Shadow Chimes 2:06½, $5100, and Diamond King, a green pacer by Mambrino King, $1100.

Robert I. Orr will ship his fine young stallion Oro Guy to Henry Helman at Portland, Oregon. Mr. Helman handled this animal as a three-year-old, and after three months' training had him going miles in 2:20 and quarters in 34 seconds. Oro Guy was sired by Oro Wilkes, and his dam by Guy Wilkes. The stallion will make the coming season at Portland, and will then be trained by Mr. Helman for the northern circuit.

Cris Simpson brought down a car load of horses to Park farm, adjoining the Irvington track last week says the Rural Spirit. The car consisted of his stallion Bonner N. B. 2:17; Phil N. 2:19½; Alta Norte 2:16½; Santiam 2:24½ and a fine lot of yearlings by Bonner N. B. These yearlings are the finest lot that has ever been seen here sired by one horse, and if they are a sample of Bonner's get, and it is fair to presume they are, stamp him one of the best sires in the State. They are not only large and well formed, but we are reliably informed they are chuck full of natural speed, that attracted the attention of everyone who has seen them go. Mr. Simpson has a number of colts entered in the big stake to be raced for at the State Fair next year, and feels confident his prospects are equal to any one for first money.

A five year old doubled-gaited brown gelding, handsome and broken to drive single or double, with a mark of 2:30, and a trial of 2:19 this year with quarters in 32½ seconds, is offered for sale. Is perfectly sound and a high class gentleman's driving horse. He was sired by Acrobat 15:184, and his dam is Negress by Wibipple's Hambletonian. See advertisement in in this issue and address his owner, J. M. Ferguson, Santa Cruz, for particulars.

Henry Hellman has made application to have his black stallion Alton, full brother to Chebals 2:04½, Del Norte 2:08 and five others in the list, registered. Being by Altamont out of the great broodmare Tecora, Alton is one of the best bred stallions in California, but will have to have a slight change of name before he can be registered as there is already a horse registered by that name. Mr. Hellman has claimed the name of Alton B. for his horse, in honor of his breeder, Jay Beach.

Grace Kaiser, the dam of Coney 2:02 and McZeus 2:13, is destined to be one of the greatest of broodmares. She is the dam of that phenomenal green pacer by Titus owned in Los Angeles, mention of which was made in this paper last week. Grace Kaiser is but thirteen years old and there are at least two of her produce that should enter the list next year, and both in 2:20 or better. Grace is by Kaiser 2200, first dam by Comet, son of Almont Jr. 1764; second dam the producing mare Lady Star by Squire Talmadge 668, third dam Lady Halsey, pedigree not traced.

Mr. August Belmont, the chairman of the Jockey Club, saw Creseus beat The Abbot at Brighton Beach last summer, and said to Mr. Ketcham: "I have always considered up to this time that the great thoroughbred record-breaker, Tenbroeck, outclassed all other horses I have ever seen. But since seeing Creseus I must place Tenbroeck second, as this stallion, in my opinion, outclasses every horse, living or dead, trotter, pacer or runner." Mr. Belmont then commissioned John Madden to buy for him the best trotting brood mare he could find to breed to Creseus, and Mr. Madden has just purchased a very handsome young mare by Baron Wilkes, from Almata by Almont, grandam Alma Mater by Mambrino Patchen.

F. W. Perkins, formerly a resident of Alameda county, but now engaged with the big hardware firm of Baker & Hamilton at their Sacramento establishment, writes us under date of December 1st, that there are not many horses at present at the Sacramento track, but they are a high class lot. Zombro 2:11 is looking fine, also a filly by Stam B. out of Zombro's dam, took his eye. A little pacer by Diablo that is stalled at the track can pace rings around a majority of the side-wheelers, and a trotting yearling by Stam B. is also a fast one. The Toddhunter colt by Zombro out of a Silver Bow mare is one of the crackerjacks of the place, but the apple of Mr. Perkins' eye and about "the most perfect piece of horseflesh" he ever owned is his mare by Signator 24:337, son of Sidney and a mare by Dictator. Mr. Perkins is certain in his own mind that this mare is the handsomest thing in Sacramento and his views are shared by many.

The Rider and Driver critic thus describes the judging of the entries in the champion trotting-bred stallion class at the New York Horse Show: "The horses were shown by the side of saddle horses and they all gave evidence of careful training in this manner of exhibiting. It soon became evident that the contest for first honors was between the black stallion Dreamer 2:14, as a three-year-old, and the seal brown Advertiser 2:15½, whose three-year-old record of 2:16 was made to a high-wheeled sulky. The horses are distinctly different in conformation. The bodies and legs of each are ideal, of the biggest class of the American trotter, but the head and neck of Dreamer lack the higher finish of the blood-like son of Electioneer, whose head, neck and general conformation are perfect enough to challenge the admiration of the artist, while his blood lines are unexcelled by any horse of the past or present. The judges very properly attached the championship ribbon to Advertiser's bridle, and gave the reserve ribbon to the black son of Oakland Baron. The winning of this prize places Advertiser in the class of Mambrino King, Stamboul and Dare Devil."

Sprigtail Ducks and Their Habits.

One of our most graceful and popular ducks is the common long-necked sprig, otherwise known as pintail. Both names are descriptive, and have reference to the two long black feathers which make so striking a decoration of the male bird.

The sprig is one of the largest of ducks in length, though inferior to several in weight. His abnormally long neck accounts for at least half the distance, and the two tail feathers serve to balance it, so he does not look out of proportion. Indeed the sprig is one of the most graceful of waterfowl, if he does not possess this quality in a greater degree than any other duck.

The adult male in full plumage is an ornament to any bunch of game, there being no such striking display of colors as is found in some of his more gaudy cousins. His bill is blue, margined with black around the edges, and along the median line on top. His head, and half the neck are a rich warm brown, with purple and green reflection on the sides. The breast and entire under parts are clear snow white, this color running up into the brown of the upper neck in two stripes parallel to the nape, and curling slightly forward. The nape in full plumaged birds is a lustrous black. His head is of a grayish color, being finely waved with black and white, the two blending at a little distance. The wing coverts, as the feathers which cover the flooded wing are called, are strikingly marked with lustrous black. Much of the wing is a lead gray, the speculum or bright spot being of a bronze color with green reflections, bordered before with buff, and edged on the inside with white. The tail and after parts of the bird are black, often iridescent with many flashes of green, violet or blue. The feet are slaty blue. However, the colors of the sprig are too well known among those who are interested in ducks from gastronomic or other reasons to need much description.

Sprigs belong to the river or marsh subdivision of the duck tribe, as distinguished from the deep water sea ducks, or fuliginæ, such as the bluebills, redheads, canvasbacks and the like. They are lovers of grain and various aquatic plants such as waterpots and other tender mud roots. Celery, and indeed almost anything that is digestible, will be eaten by the sprig in times of need, but given plenty and he is one of the most delicate of ducks, being exclusively a vegetable feeder, and usually very fat. Like most other California ducks, sprigs are largely nocturnal in their habits, the result of continual persecution. This has been taken advantage of by some of the unscrupulous hunters, and as a result the birds have been driven away from many places where they otherwise would now be numerous.

Owing to their lean, race-horse build, sprigs can fly at a great speed, but they don't like to. Unless driven by some powerful impulse such as fear or desire to leave the country, they seldom fly faster than 100 miles an hour. Once in a while a lone one affiliates with a flock of teal, and he usually manages to stay with even this fast company for some time before dropping out of the running.

Sprigs are one of the most wary varieties of all their shy tribe, and one in a flock will frequently spoil the hunter's chances for a shot at more confiding game. When sitting on the water they get their heads into the air almost a foot, and from this exalted position they see trouble a long way off. Once spied, they do not tarry, but mount almost vertically to a safe distance and then make off. If very wild they come in to decoys the same way, making many circles out of range, and viewing the situation carefully from all sides before deciding to join forces with the dumb company below. Many make the serious mistake of shooting at them when this first circle is made, and it is usually an ill-advised performance, rewarded only by some crippled bird falling far from the blind, either lost, or the cause of lost shots in the retrieving. It is better to let them go than to risk spoiling a good shot at this time, since they will usually decoy. Sometimes they will circle several times and then give it up. The novice usually decides to take chances with the next flock to turn up, and frequently it is the same one, returned to light, and only kept from so doing by the undue haste of the shooter. "More haste, less speed" applies to duck shooting as well as other things. It always pays to take time and let them get away scot free, rather than mortally wounded, a prey to coyotes, owls or raccoons.

Number six shot and plenty of powder is an unhealthy combination for sprigs, and properly administered is as effective a dose as need be employed. Of course, if they are wild and do not decoy, larger shot should be used.—Los Angeles Express.

From Muncie, Ind., comes a story of a game warden who offered his assistance as guide to two gunners who did not know of his official status and were out for a Sunday shooting trip. They gladly accepted his aid, and everything was looking lovely until a covey of quail was flushed, when their new friend calmly proceeded to arrest them for violation of the game laws relating to Sunday shooting. This shows to what length a well-meaning and energetic game warden will go in order to make the honest dollar represented by his share of the fine imposed on game law violators. That official should come to California and apply for a position as game warden. We know of one or two thirty individuals in a near-by county.

At the Traps.

Some clever pigeon shooting took place at Ingleside last Wednesday. Among the sportsmen present were a number of Eastern cracks, several of them members of the Carteret Gun Club. The visiting sportsmen were the guests of Alexander Hamilton, Esq.; among them were John W. Gates, R. A. Welch, J. Seaver Page, D. J. Bradley, J. Roache of Chicago, and J. Hopkins. The Easterners proved themselves thoroughly familiar with trap shooting and showed a degree of skill with the shotgun that corroborated the reputations of several of the gentlemen present, who have participated in the Grand American Handicap shoots and also grassed pigeons at the traps in England, France, Belgium and at Monte Carlo. Clarence A. Haight, Otto Feudner, Ed Donohoe, Mr. Doyle, of Menlo Park, W. S. Kittle and W. C. Ralston were also present. The birds supplied during the day were a fairly good lot, but the weather conditions were such as to cause many birds to be "sitters," particularly so in the two miss and out events. The weather was favorable to the shooters when they commenced the sport, but as the shooting progressed, rain and wind increased and made shooting both difficult and uncomfortable, in fact the final event was not shot out owing to the increasing downpour.

The first event was a ten bird race, with eight guns entered. This event was opened by "Bob" Welch, who grassed his bird neatly and shot out the balance of his string straight as did D. J. Bradley, J. Seaver Page and Otto Feudner each lost a bird. During the day Mr. Page did not shoot up to form by any means. Feudner was in good trim all day, his quick second barrel was used effectively at times and elicited favorable comment from the Eastern shooters.

In the second race at ten birds Welch again dropped the initial bird, he killed straight as did Bradley and Haight.

A third ten bird race put Mr. Welch on record for another straight score. One thing was very noticeable during the shoot. Welch has a knack of using one of the most effective second barrels ever shot on the Ingleside grounds. Both Gates and Bradley are also high class men with the second barrel. The Eastern shooters, it was noticed, nearly all preferred hammer guns for trap shooting instead of the hammerless ejector gun.

The event of the day was a team race between Welch and Bradley against Haight and Feudner. This match was at 25 birds per man and $25 a corner. It was practically the Carteret Gun Club versus the Olympic Gun Club, each organization being represented by two of their most expert trap shots. Alec Hamilton was chosen referee, Bradley won the toss and Welch went to the 28 yard mark and opened the race by dropping the first bird using but one barrel, the others followed each killing his first bird. From start to finish the interest was unaltered. Welch missed his first bird for the day, in the fourth round in this race. A "magpie" from No. 4 trap, badly hit with both barrels, had vitality enough to flutter over the fence. Haight then lost the next bird, a right quarterer from No. 3 trap, which dropped dead out. Haight, who decidedly was out of shooting form, then lost his eighth bird, a straightaway from No. 2 trap, a black pigeon with white tipped wings, a hard bird to see against the misty background.

The next bird lost was one of the best pigeons released during the day, a strong blue bird from No. 2 tailed off to the left gradually towering and with rocket speed. Haight's had luck allowed his eleventh bird, a small dark gray pigeon, a speedy left incoming quarterer from No. 2 trap, to dodge the pattern and get away. On the beginning of the twelfth round the Easterners were three birds ahead. Bradley's fourteenth bird dropped dead out. The fourth section of five birds was killed straight by the quartette. Welch lost his twenty-second bird, a low flying left incomer from No. 2 trap, he hit with the first barrel, but was behind with the second. Haight then stepped to the score and lost, dead out, a rising incomer from No. 3 trap. Both Bradley and Feudner then killed out straight. The referee announced the Eastern men the winners by two birds. It was the opinion of the sportsmen present that Feudner kept pace with his opponents. Haight's shooting was much below his ordinary standard. The latter part of the team race was shot out in a heavy downpour.

Following the team contest a miss and out was arranged; Gates, who is a very clever shot, and a genial sportsman as well, went out on his ninth bird, which was taken by a gust of wind and hurtled through the air like a flash. Bradley also lost his eighth. Feudner killed his ninth bird and won the match.

A second miss and out was divided by Feudner, Bradley and Welch, the storm by this time placing an injunction on further shooting.

On Sunday last the Eastern shooters were the guests of Mr. Hamilton at the Country Club. They had an opportunity to test the mettle of our native valley quail. Mr. Gates is of the opinion that the Eastern hob white is just as hard a bird as our quail. The visitors not only bagged a number of quail handsily, but also shot a number of ducks and English snipe. On Thursday and Friday, the party enjoyed a duck shoot on some of the best Suisun duck ponds.

CARTRIDGE AND SHELL.

Two of the grandest specimens of mounted moose heads it has ever been our pleasure to see we noticed on exhibition in the show window of an Oakland store one evening this week.

Geese are reported to be arriving in greater numbers every day. Glenn county will no doubt be visited by them in immense flocks as it has been for years past.

The Willows Journal is authority for the following story: A market hunter named Stewart is slaughtering the wild geese near Norman, in Glenn county. Stewart has a large band of wild geese with their wings clipped, which he uses as decoys. He selects a lake frequented by the geese, erects a fence of wire netting in the middle of the lake, allowing the netting to stand about a foot above the water, puts the geese in the enclosure and then makes "stands" around the lake. His shooters are placed in the "stand," and when the geese are attracted by the decoys and sail around before alighting are very easily killed. The plan adopted by Stewart is such that a man who could not hit a bunch of haystacks is at no disadvantage while in these blinds.

The Wisconsin Legislature has put in force an act which, in its protective clauses, is far in advance of the game and song bird statutes of any other State. When the friends of the birds have attempted to secure legislation which would be effective in preventing the wearing of the plumage of song birds as trimming for hats, they have been met with active and successful opposition from the dealers in millinery supplies. The Wisconsin Audubon Society succeeded in securing the passage of a law which will give the State Game Warden the power to seize on sight any birdskins or parts of birdskins that are intended for decorative purposes. The section of the law reads: "No person shall kill or catch or have in possession, living or dead, any wild bird other than a game bird. No part of the plumage, skin or body of any bird protected by this section shall be sold or had in possession for sale." The penalty in Wisconsin for the selling of any part of a bird for millinery or other purposes is a fine of $5 for each such part of a bird or imprisonment for ten days, or both, at the discretion of the court. If fashion shall decree this fall that bird plumage must be worn, there will be an interesting time in Wisconsin.

Considerable trouble and annoyance from trespassers or poachers is the lot of most gun clubs having accessible shooting ground for the independent contingent, particularly so when a keeper is not in charge.

The Willow Lodge shooting tract, it seems, has not been immune from outside visitors, in fact, the club men claim certain individuals have imposed upon their good nature and trampled on their legal rights for more than a year past. Some of the ark owners in their vicinity have been accommodating city shooters who have time and again shot on the club's ponds, often before daylight it is said, thus spoiling the morning shoot for the clubmen.

Matters in this respect recently reached a crisis with the Willow Lodge men, who determined to take legal proceedings for the protection of their interests. Application to the authorities at Alvarado was ineffective in having a warrant issued. A trip to the District Attorney's office in Oakland was necessary before a warrant could be procured. The result was that George Franzen was placed under arrest this week. He was released on bail and the case will come up for trial next week. It is said the matter will be vigorously prosecuted. This case will be eagerly followed by many of the local shooters; both parties are well known and some speculation is rife as to the outcome. Franzen claims that there is nothing to the matter at all.

For hunting at long distances in the open, where a flat trajectory saves the necessity of estimating the range accurately, the small calibre, high power rifle is all right, and with the soft nose bullet it makes a good hunting arm. It is all right as a military arm, also, for the light weight and small bulk of its cartridges enables the soldier to carry about double the ammunition that was heretofore possible, and the full mantled projectile makes a tree or a log breastwork a mighty poor protection, but for shooting moderate sized game at short distances, in a thickly populated section of country, the old-fashioned large calibre, low powered ammunition is just as effective and a good deal safer.

You don't care much about trajectory at short ranges; what you want is something that will knock your game down and make a good trail of blood if it gets up again, and the shorter distance that your bullet travels after coming out on the further side of your mark, the less chance is there of something happening for which you will be everlastingly sorry.

The present fashion for small bore rifles of high power for large game shooting it is claimed is being carried to extremes; with many sportsmen there is a strong desire as well as a strong belief that there will be a return to larger calibre and lower power before long.

This really appears to be the case. Last year it was at the risk of being punctured by a marksman in the next township that one went out after deer in some parts of Marin county. Word had gone abroad that deer were plentiful and the result was that the country was overrun with riders, a large proportion of whom were armed with the very latest weapons carrying the 6MM. Navy, 30 United States Army, 303 Savage, or 30 Winchester or Marlin cartridges, many with full manted bullets which would go through a deer, a couple of fences, and have enough energy left to make things decidedly interesting for any luckless individual chancing to be in their line of flight, although far beyond sight or sound of the man who started the projectile on its journey.

These arms would have been all right for shooting goats in the Rockies, antelope on the plains, or the velts of South Africa, or taking a pot shot at a Filipino behind a tree, but for hunting deer in the brush-wood, where the average shot when offered was at about sixty yards, a 44-10 would have been amply powerful and a great deal safer.

A very curious shot occurred last fall up in Oregon. There was a party in camp and the girls sometimes accompanied the men grouse and quail shooting in the scrub and patch clearings. A young woman accompanied her husband one day, and coming back to camp they came across a mountain lion emerging from the brush. Not knowing the nature of the beast the man turned quickly on his heel to take a shot with a shot-gun. He was of full habit, loaded up with gout, and, as he turned, without warning the gout snapped in the calf of each leg, right in the sciatic nerve, in a playful way it has, crippling him totally for any time from two to twenty-four hours. As he dropped, shrieking with pain, one barrel of the gun went off as it fell from his hand, and the beast came right at them. In less time than it takes to tell it that plucky little woman picked up the gun, and without ever having fired one shot in her life before, literally blew the top of the brute's head off at very close range, and she did not burst out crying or go swooning when it was done, either. Her husband was in a bad way, and she had to sit with him, firing and calling for help, for a couple of hours, expecting every minute that the female lion would come along, but help came first, and the skin is now in the parlor. Since then, strange to say, she has been crazy about shooting, goes hunting, and is a pretty fair shot.

For the man who is going on his first deer hunting expedition next season it is a good plan to buy his rifle now or a little later and take it off to a quiet and secluded nook where he may get acquainted with its gentle eccentricities without danger of killing any one. Every season a number of men with brand new and untried rifles go up into the woods and proceed to fill the air full of lead, without in any wise affecting the venison census. A good deal of this is due to the fact that they are afflicted with the mysterious element known as buck fever; part of it is due to the unacquaintance with firearms, but a great deal of it may be laid to the fact that they relied with child-like simplicity on the correct sighting of the rifle as sent out from the factory. They do not realize that sighting is very much a matter of eyesight, and that the man who targets the rifle at the factory (they are all supposed to have been targeted) may have a very different pair of optics from their own, and that a sight which suits the tester's eyes may be very different from what they may require. In the rear sight, generally sent out with sporting rifles nowadays, the little piece of metal, containing the notch through which the front sight is seen, slides in a framework and is held in place by a little set screw. This may be loosened and the piece of metal containing the notch raised or lowered until, by practical experience, the shooter has got it in the position which best suits his own particular needs. Practice with a new rifle is apt to teach one that the distance stamped in yards upon the rear sight of most firearms, while it may mean something, is not always to be relied on, and it is well to discover just how much allowance should be made for deviations of this kind before getting into a position where a few inches over or under shooting means the gain or loss of a pair of antlers which will look very nice over one's chimney piece.

ROD.

Swordfish Taken With Rod and Reel.

The Sierra Madres are capped with snow, and seen from Santa Catalina island, sixty miles away, the white domes stand out in remarkable contrast against the vivid blue of the December sky. The sea is smooth, except where the swordfish leaps and falls heavily, creating a ripple. The fact that many swordfish are in these waters now has occasioned interest among the anglers, especially as some of them have been trying to take one of these swordmen of the sea with the rod, an unheard-of proceeding. What has caused so unusual a run of these fish is not known, but they are here in large numbers, and that they will strike or bite was discovered some time ago.

A fisherman had a strike, and like a flash of lightning something shot around the boat, making the lice hiss, then plunged down deep into the channel, to come up again and leap into the air like an arrow, quivering in the sunlight for a moment, then falling.

"A swordfish!" shouted the boatman. "Cut the line!"

"Not on your life," retorted the angler. "Stand by your oars and keep the stern of the boat to the fish."

The man obeyed, but it was evident that he fully expected to be run down by the fish. The fish, however, had other plans, and with a rush it ran off all the line and passed on, probably the first swordfish ever played on the rod. The incident created no little interest among anglers devoted to large and unusual game, and the Tuna club has undertaken to offer a handsome prize to the angler who shall take a swordfish. It is barely possible that swordfish will be taken by casting with live smelt, as the fish have been seen swimming lazily along in circles, so near that a cast could easily have been made among them.

"I will tell you what will be the result if you ever bring a swordfish to gaff, which I consider possible," said an angler to an enthusiast; "when he sees the boat he will turn and ram you; what you want is an armored boat."

"I'll take my chances," responded the other.

"I've seen a swordfish ram a boat just for the fun of it," said a boatman in the group. "It was not here, but off Long Island, New York. I used to fish with a man named Jack Ormsby, and one day he was pulling along when suddenly, without any warning, up through the bottom of the boat came the sword of a fish. It passed almost between his legs, and if it had been a foot more forward it would have spitted him like a rabbit. I knew what it was in a moment, but Jack was dazed. I grabbed it, and in trying to bend it over and break it, I split the plank and the boat began to fill. All the time the fish was struggling to get away and almost tipped us over. I finally managed to get the sword over the thwart. Then I took off my coat and plugged up the hole as well as I could and Jack pulled for the shore. We reached there half full of water. I don't want any swordfish in mine."

"No one has ever been hit by one in these waters," said another boatman, "but there are no fighters in the world like the swordfish. I was rowing along by Church rock some time ago when I saw a splash throwing the water high in the air. I pulled up until I could see that the disturbance was made by a pair of swordfish dashing at each other. I could plainly see their big black eyes, and the long, rapier-like swords cutting the water. They were swimming in a circle perhaps a hundred feet across and would go around perhaps twice, getting nearer and nearer, then would turn and fly at each other like a shot out of a gun; and when they struck I could see the water fly as though a torpedo had exploded, one of them always being lifted out of the water by the shock. They made rushes three times while I lay there, and finally the sword of one went through the other and they struggled for five minutes trying to break away. All at once they separated, and I saw the water dyed with blood. One fish was evidently done for, as he turned tail and swam off.

"The other swam a little way, then turned and headed for him, his dorsal fin out of water, and when he struck I heard it as plainly as though it had been out of water. The sword went completely through the fish, and as the champion jerked himself away and swam off I pulled to the dying fish and caught him up with a boat hook, expecting every minute I might get a blow up through the keel. I had hard work getting the fish in, as he must have weighed 200 pounds, but when I did he was a sight. His sword was broken off for about eighteen inches, showing that he had been disabled by a blow from the other's sword. Another blow had gone into his head in front of the eye, but the quietus, which I had seen, was directly through the body, leaving a gaping wound.

"That was the second fight I have seen," continued the boatman. "The other was between swordfish and a whale, and the way they cleaned the whale out was a caution. I was coming home late one afternoon. When off Descanso canyon I saw a big whale go out of water, falling with a crash that could have been heard a mile away. The whale had no sooner struck the water than it rolled over and over, striking the surface with terrific blows. I knew something was after it and pulled nearer. Up went the whale again, and I distinctly saw a big spearfish banging on it. It had driven its sword so far into the whale that it couldn't get it out, and so was carried into the air. Then I saw several killers—a kind of grampus. They rushed at the whale and seized it by the lips, evidently tearing off great pieces of flesh, as they generally do, while the swordfish rammed it from below. The fight kept up fifteen or twenty minutes. Then the whale sank out of sight and undoubtedly went to the bottom, dead, as it came ashore a few days later all cut up. That was a great fight, and it showed the ugliness of the swordfish, as they were fighting for fun, for they don't eat whale, but mackerel and smelts. The killers were after food, and the swordfish just stood in and helped them."

In contradistinction to the swordfish, the sawfish has by many readers been taken for the same fish by reason of the somewhat similar instrument attached to its head.

More energetic than any other sharks, of which group it is a species, is the sawfish, whose snouts are prolonged into a broad blade of cartilage, which is horizontal when the fish is swimming in a normal position, and has both its edges set with slightly curved teeth about an inch apart. The end of this formidable looking weapon is blunt and comparatively soft, so that it is quite incapable of the feats popularly attributed to it of piercing whales' bodies, ships' timbers, etc. It attacks other fish by a swift lateral thrust of the saw beneath them, the keen edge disemboweling them. Then it feeds upon the soft entrails, which are apparently the only food it can eat from the peculiar shape of its mouth. It has an enormous number of small teeth, sometimes as many as fifty rows in one individual, but they are evidently unfit for the rough duties required of their teeth by the garbage-eating members of the family.

It seems rather an odd idea to fasten metal tags to marine fishes and then let them loose in the ocean with the idea of identifying them as individuals in case they are caught at a future time; but this is what the United States Fish Commission is doing just now with cod, 1500 of which have been duly tagged and released this year.

No two tags are alike, the markings on them being stamped in a series of letters and numbers, a record of which is kept in a book in such a manner that if a tagged codfish turns up, a moment's reference to the memoranda will furnish the history of that particular specimen, with the date of liberation, weight and so forth. For example, a cod wearing a tag with the raised inscription "S 100" has a complete identification card, so that she cannot be mixed up with any other fish entered in the commission's ledger.

Only "brood fish"—that is, spawning females—are tagged. They are bought from fishermen, stripped of their eggs at Wood's Holl, Mass., and liberated in the waters of Vineyard sound, after having the tags attached to them. The tag is a small piece of copper, securely fastened by a wire placed through a fin near its juncture with the body. It does not matter which fin is chosen, though a hack or tail fin is best. The tag is very light, and its attachment in the manner described does no harm whatever to the fish.

By a novel arrangement of parts Taylor Rods of Sodom, N. Y., has produced a fishing rod which it is claimed, is not only better balanced than the ordinary rod, but which permits of a very convenient and ingenious method of reel manipulation. The hand-grip, at the end of which the reel is located, is divided, and within it is arranged the gear wheels and springs for the reel-actuating mechanism. The line extends through the hand-grip to the rod, which is adjustable in it. The reel is spring-actuated and is provided with brakes for checking its speed, and with means, extending through the handle, for winding up the spring. Paws prevent the reel from being unwound, unless it is desired to play the fish, when these may be released. The mechanism for automatically winding the reel, is all contained in the hand-grip, the divided character of which permits of its being readily applicable to and removable from the rod when required.

One of the amusing sights of this city is the showcase in the sporting goods store which contains a peculiar style of trolling bait attached to which is a lengthy article from a daily paper condemning the use of the bait on account of its murderous qualities. Either the article in question was honestly written, and its condemnation should kill the sale for the affair mentioned, or it was an advertisement of the same, which it is to be truly hoped will spoil more sales than it makes. The cool cynicism with which the dealer exposes to the public notice an article condemning the bait and the bait itself would be rather amusing under most other circumstances.

The threatening weather last Sunday deterred many anglers from venturing out in boats. A nice catch of striped bass, however, was made by W. F. Shattuck, J. B. Kenniff and J. Rothschild. The party caught eighteen fish in Petaluma creek, in the vicinity of the Petaluma Gun Club house at low water, the depth in the creek varying from five to fifteen feet. The largest fish landed was an eighteen pounder. The others ranged in size as follows: One of fourteen and one half pounds, two of eleven pounds, two of eight pounds, eleven of six and five pounds and two of three pounds. All of the fish were taken on the 5 B Wilson spoon. Most of them were full of milt or roe and were ready to spawn.

On the following day Shattuck landed fourteen more bass, the heaviest one weighed fourteen pounds.

One day this week O. W. Jackson and R. W. McFarland trolled Raccoon straits for bass. The fishermen did not get a strike all day. Late in the afternoon the two anglers caught a net which had broken adrift and had one end caught fast in the rocky bottom of the Angel island shore. The net was over five hundred feet long and when hauled out the boat contained a miscellaneous collection of drowned ducks, decaying bass, crabs, and all sorts of drift stuff.

Bass fishing at Bay Farm island has not been very good recently.

A run of small steelhead at Point Reyes tide water has enabled several knights of the rod to enjoy some trout fishing this week.

Oakland Show Notes.

The bench show across the bay this week is the best for quality and class, ever held in Oakland. The judging was almost without exception satisfactory; the attendance, interest and enthusiasm more than anticipated and everything pertaining to the exhibition came off smoothly and without a hitch. A full report of the show will appear next week, a more extended notice than is here given with the list of awards, being unavoidably postponed until next issue.

DOINGS IN DOGDOM.

Mr. J. G. Morgan, the owner of Champion Daddy, purchased from John Bradshaw the snappy little bitch Legs and Feet. This bitch made her appearance here at the May show this year, winning third in novice after Norfolk Two Step and Lewanee Lace. She is full of character and class and game as a pebble and should make a good brood bitch.

Some excellent Bull Terrier bitch puppies were sent to Dr. O. C. Joslen, of Los Angeles, from the Woodlawn Kennels recently. This particular litter turned out splendidly, every pup showing class and quality. These youngsters are bred on the same blood lines that Frank Dole, the premier Bull Terrier breeder of the United States, has made a success of. We expect to hear of some fine Bull Terriers owned in the South; the stock is now there to breed from.

Mrs. C. G. Saxe during a call at this office last week gave us the pleasing information that her P. K. L. champion St. Bernard King Menelek is in splendid shape and looking hotter than ever. It is to be regretted, that by an inadvertence, he was not entered at the Oakland show. He is one of the few good ones we have left on the Coast.

Mrs. Saxe's other fancy, Great Danes, has just as much interest for her as in the past. A four months' old harlequin bitch puppy by Bully out of Lady Ermine she reports is a coming one and will not only be a handsomely marked bitch, but there is a promise of matured quality that will be more than acceptable to lovers of a high class Great Dane.

BARKS.

Bread and scraps are not sufficiently nourishing to restore a wreck of a dog to robust health and good condition.

You may breed from your Fox Terrier bitch, or any other breed for that matter, the first time she comes in season with every safety. If it were injurious Nature would have ordained otherwise. This, assuming that the bitch is sound and sufficiently matured.

To the novice the term Setter as applied to dogs is a matter of interrogation, as he is to all intents and purposes a Pointer. It seems that before the advent of firearms, birds were netted, and for this reason the dog was taught to sit, he and the bird being taken in the same net. Thus came the name Setter, although a misnomer at the present date.

The success of a dog show depends largely upon a wise selection of judges, for breeders will not exhibit where they know that their kennels will not have just treatment, nor will fanciers attend when it is evident that there is to be a repetition of the Fitzsimmons-Sharkey decision. Furthermore, the general public will be so dissatisfied with the decisions that bench shows will speedily lose their popularity in the place where this short-sighted policy is pursued.

There are many reasons why some men make a success of breeding dogs, while others fail. One of the very first essentials required is the love for the dog and not the dollar if it is the intention to make dog breeding a business. The breeder must get some revenue out of it to pay the expenses, of taxes, feed, postage, expressage and many other things, but he must be a true lover of the dog or he will not understand or study the breed, and consequently will be a poor judge of even his own dogs, as he will not understand each individual dog in his kennel and his wants. He will be unable to tell when one of his stock is ailing until he is past helping in many cases. The man who is not a true lover of a dog is not in sympathy with his dogs.

The breeder who succeeds is the man who loves his strain of dogs and each individual in his kennel. By their actions or looks he knows in an instant if there is anything wrong with them, what it is, and attends to the matter immediately. He feeds only that on which his dogs thrive best. The health and condition of his dogs are of more account, consequently of more profit.

You never see mangy dogs in a kennel owned by such men, nor puppies when from two to four months old that are mere skeletons in flesh, but whose stomachs are inflated like young balloons, caused by worms. Old and young are in a healthy condition with fine coats and in good flesh.

The successful breeder is the one who is continually improving the type of his breed by scientific mating. He gains in reputation every year, and his sales increase every year because he ships to customers good goods, and his dogs in fine condition are a continual advertisement wherever they go.

He ships them in neat crates, as light as is safe, and answers correspondence promptly and in a business manner. When favored with an order he attends to shipping promptly and tries to send his customer just as good a dog as he can for the money instead of trying to get all the money he can for an apology of a dog.

The time-honored sport of fox hunting is steadily gaining in popularity, as is evidenced by the organization of new hunt clubs and an awakened interest in localities where the pastime has been neglected heretofore. In the sunny South, where the chase has been a favorite recreation ever since the days of Lord Baltimore and the times of the Cavaliers, fox hunting is as deeply rooted as the native trees, and in the Northern States it is becoming a fixed institution—not a fad, as it was considered by the public some years ago. It is worthy of note, also, that in certain sections where the chase began in the form of a drag hunt, this substitute for the genuine article no longer serves to fill the ambition of the novices, who are becoming fox-hunters in fact as well as in name. It is a recreation which never becomes stale or uninteresting. Once a fox-hunter, always a fox-hunter, may be regarded as an axiom.

The sport of fox-hunting in California is not by any means a rarity. While it is true the bag has been used to some extent, still Reynard has time and again kept the Burlingame pack in full cry. Failing to procure a fox the hunters have also used a coyote, a substitute that was by no means devoid of sport and excitement.

The Radnor Hunt Club, the swell hunting organization of Delaware county, Pennsylvania, some time ago was forced to acknowledge that English hounds and English hunters were not a success. The club six years ago imported a pack of 100 English bred hounds and brought them here in charge of an English "whip." The hounds were well tried for three seasons, and they have never proved themselves to be as good here at either hunting or running a fox as their American cousins. In 1899 there was made a change. The English whip was sent home to his native country and the pack of English hounds were sent to the stock farm of Charles Mather, master of the hounds of the club, on the Brandywine. At the club kennels in Radnor there is a reconstructed and finely-collected pack of about 80 hounds, not an English-bred dog in the lot. They are in charge of a new "whip," Marshall Altamus.

JERSEY CATTLE.

Imported Flying Fox--His Sire and Dam.

I see that you mention the importation of the Jersey bull Flying Fox in your paper of November 23, 1901, page 11.

The great appreciation shown at T. S. Cooper's sale of imported Jersey cattle in May, 1902, for the get of the Island champion bull, Flying Fox, P-2792-HC, added to the favor they command on the Island of Jersey and in England, indicates that the famous line of blood emanating from the black cow Sultanne P-7-HC, which found its first popular re-individualization in the bull Golden Lad, now dead, has lodged in Flying Fox as the greatest of its many representatives.

In England there was a strong disposition to award to Golden Fern's Lad (the sire of Flying Fox) the mantle of Golden Lad. This preference never obtained a firm foothold in America, though Fern's daughter Golden Sultana made a sensation by bringing the top price in the Cooper sale of 1900, in which many daughters of Golden Lad competed. England had taken nearly all of the best of Fern's daughters before Mr. Cooper resumed his importations and, with this one exception, he could not find the kind he wanted. Judging by the sale of 1901, American breeders have decided by common consent that Flying Fox outranks his sire, Golden Fern's Lad, and is to succeed Golden Lad as the premier blood source.

Golden Fern's Lad, the sire of Flying Fox, ranked as high in public appreciation on the Island as ever Golden Lad did and when he went to England he could have remained on the Island and have had full patronage at five times the regulation fee fixed by the Royal Society for hulls that participate in its prizes. His son Flying Fox was compelled last spring, in order to suppress patronage to within rational limits, to forfeit his prize winnings pay his fines and raise his service fee to five times the stipulated amount. Forcing this issue was probably the greatest public tribute to the merit of a sire ever paid on the Island.

Yet the popularity of Flying Fox's stock with Americans is due more to their knowledge of his dam Sultanne's Rosette than to his sire Golden Fern's Lad, as far as his blood elements are concerned. Of course individuality has greatly to do with it but the feeling with American breeders is strong that family is the safest assurance that individuality will reproduce itself in type and quality. The foreigners pin their faith for this more largely to the Fern side of Fox's pedigree, being acquainted with it on a more extensive scale than we. We know Rosette here and have seen the quality of the descendants of this fine rugged constitutioned yet beautiful granddaughter of Sultanne in the progeny of her sons Ravachol, John Bull, Flying Fox and Forfarshire, and her grandson The Owl, as well as in her own calves dropped in this country. The estimate of her blood value accordingly ranks with us as near the top as any imported blood can. Of all living cows she stands unrivaled as the progenitor of great hulls.

Rosette has several splendidly bred sons, any one of which should be a priceless fixture to the herd fortunate enough to hold him, provided it contains cows worthy to mate with him. Of these Flying Fox would be declared by popular voice to be the best bred owing to the prestige of his sire Golden Fern's Lad. He is coming four years old. Forfarshire coming three, is Rosette's youngest son on the Island and her only one there now, as John Bull and Ravachol are both dead. Forfarshire was by Picton, a grandson of Golden Lad and was three times closely inbred to the great sire Wolsley, noted as a great cross for Golden Lad and others. Sultanne's blood, Forfarshire, has also two crosses of the famous cow Phillis, who alone ever beat the old queen of the Island, Coomassie in the show ring.

There are two other sons of Rosette in this country that are royally bred. Rosette's Golden Lad, coming two, is by Orlando, a cracking good sire that is inbred to Golden Lad. When sold as a calf in Mr. Cooper's sale of May, 1900, for $800, many thought him the finest calf of his age that had ever come under the auction hammer. He went to Dr. C. E. Still, Kirksville, Mo., where he still remains. Rosette's yearling is a heifer but she recently dropped a bull calf in the herd of Mrs. M. M. Patterson, Port Kennedy, Pa., who has been the owner of Rosette since Mr. Cooper's sale of 1900. Her last bull calf is by Golden Mon Plaisir, a son of Golden Lad that fetched the top price, $3500, in the last Cooper sale. Golden Mon Plaisir won the Champion Class over the Island, and his dam, Golden Lily, won First over the Island in her class. Golden Lily, along with Flying Fox, is in Mr. Cooper's importation now in quarantine. However highly Mon Plaisir is already appreciated, his dam, Golden Lily, cannot fail to add to his prestige with everyone who sees her for she is a gem among butter cows. Her hull by Flying Fox should play a good second to his sire when the bidding takes place at Linden Grove next May.

ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS ENTRANCE, of which $10 must accompany nomination; $15 to be paid January 1, 1903, $25 to be paid January 1, 1904, and $50 thirty days before the race. The Occident Cup, of the value of $400, to be added by the Society. Mile heats, three in five, to harness. First colt to receive cup and six tenths; second colt, three tenths; and third colt one tenth of the stakes. Five to enter, three to start; otherwise N. T. A. Rules govern. Nominators are not held for full amount of entrance in case goes wrong; only forfeit payments made, which relieves you from further responsibility, and declares entry out.

The Occident Stake of 1902 received 95 entries, by far the largest to that date in the history of the stake, and in 1903 this stake received 98 entries, and should be the richest stake ever trotted for on this Coast, and with only the 1st and 2nd payments made to date is now worth $2220, the 3d and 4th payments not yet due. The stake for 1904 should receive a larger entry and be very valuable. Every breeder should enter in it.

By entering your Colt in this Stake it will enhance its value in case you desire to sell.

REMEMBER THE DATE OF CLOSING IS JANUARY 1, 1902.

Sheep Breeding Suggestions.

It is generally admitted by the most experienced flockmasters that early lambs are the best and most profitable, providing, always, that provisions have been made for the warmth and shelter of the newcomers. If the breeder depends upon his ewes lambing around straw stacks, in the fields or in the open, unprotected sheds, he will find it much more practical to postpone the lambing season until warm weather comes. With a good, warm barn, protected from the cold blasts of winter and the rains, the lambs can be brought forth and have a good start before those of the neighbors, who have no protection, are born. With the knowledge that the period of gestation with the sheep is twenty-one weeks, and that a ewe which is in good condition will have the maternal instinct developed any time from the time the lambs are weaned, we can determine almost with certainty when the lambs shall appear. The ewes which are to be used for breeding purposes should be kept separated from the rest of the flock, and no other stock should be allowed in the field with them when they are with lamb, as it invariably causes injury to them. The best condition for the breeding ewe to be in is not poor and not fat. Either of these two conditions will result in weak lambs. Feed the ewes well on oats and clover hay, and compel them to take exercise, which they will do if given the run of a meadow and are fed well. In feeding them scatter the feed far enough apart so that they can feed without crowding. In driving through gates do not rush them, as that practice is very conducive of abortion. Goodall's Farmer.

Beet Pulp for Stock.

When farmers in Germany raise beets at slightly under the usual price they stipulate that they are to have hack, free of cost, pulp to the amount of forty per cent. of the weight of beets delivered. The more thrifty growers haul the pulp on the return trip from delivering beets so that the cost of transportation is almost nothing. German farmers are more and more insisting upon having a good price for beets and free pulp as well. Some of the smaller factories in Germany retain every scrap of pulp to feed their own stock. At Bollingen, in Wurttemberg, a 300-ton plant has a dairy of 400 cows which are fed on pulp from September to September. Surplus pulp is kept in cement pits, some covered enough to shed rain, some with no roof. The pits have slanting bottoms so that the water will drain off as well as to permit teams to haul out the pulp. The beet tops are ensiled with the pulp—first a layer of pulp, then six inches of beet tops, then a foot or more of pulp and so on until the pit is full. The Bollingen company gets a far better return for its pulp in this manner than to sell it at a comparatively high price.

What More do you Want?

VOL. XXIX No. 24.
36 GEARY STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1901.

SUBSCRIPTION
THREE DOLLARS A YEAR

LITTLE BOY 2:01 1-2.
CHAMPION PACER TO WAGON.
Owned by C. K. G. Billings, Chicago.

JOTTINGS.

GOOD PRICES were received for a majority of the California bred horses sold by Fasig-Tipton & Co. at New York, and some of them were a surprise to horsemen out here. Valentine 2:30, the big, brown trotter by Boodle 2:12½ that B. O. Van Bokkelen purchased for Harry K. Devereaux two years ago, and has been driven by that gentleman on the road and at the Cleveland matinees since, brought $2500. He was purchased by Mr. M. McDonald of New York. While Valentine is a big horse and very showy, there is probably not a trotting horse man in California who would have guessed his auction price at more than $1000. It is true that he earned a matinee record of 2:20 to wagon, and is a good road horse, but here in California we have not yet come to a full realization of the qualities that bring the big prices in the New York market. At this same sale Phoebe Childers 2:10½, brought $1125, less than half as much as Valentine sold for, and old Azote 2:04½, once the champion trotting gelding of the world, now a "has been" that should be retired to a life of ease, sold for $425, Joseph E. Leggett of Troy, New York, making the high bid for the old hero. Phoebe Childers should have sold for more money, despite the poor showing she made in her races this year. With a year's retirement from racing she should get over that sour disposition which caused her to be left at the post in nearly all her starts this season, and when Phoebe is just right, three heats right at her record will not stop her.

Remembrances of the only genuine ringing case we ever had in California are recalled by the sale by Dick Benson of the pacer Perhaps, better known as Walter K. 2:08 to Californians. Expelled as he is, this nine year old whirlwind brought $760 and is now the property of H. S. Baldwin, of New York City. The ringing of Perhaps was about the most audacious thing ever attempted on this side the Rockies, and had the horse been given some other name, his three owners might have made the rounds of the California circuit without the identity of the horse being discovered. But they chose to steal the name of a well known Milwaukee horse to masquerade him under and his winning a heat in 2:08 in his second race at Santa Rosa made the horsemen open their eyes and talk a lot. Telegraphic correspondence between Secretary Gocher and Secretary Kelley located the real Walter K. at home, and then there was no further doubt of the new arrival being a ringer. The protest at Vallejo settled the question and both horse and owner slipped out of the State. They went to Kansas City, where Dick Benson bought the horse for a song and tried to have him reinstated. It was impossible to convince the Board of Review, however, that anything but evil could result in reinstatement, and Benson sent the horse to the New York sale. The new owner will drive Walter K. on the famous New York speedway and it need not surprise anyone to hear of him leading the best of them in the brushes if he gets along with the hay gelding.

Milo M. Potter, the popular boniface of the swell hotel of Los Angeles, the Van Nuys, has determined to dispose of his entire stable of matinee horses, and will sell them at auction next Thursday at the Los Angeles track. Mr. Potter has been the most prominent member of that sterling organization, the Los Angeles Driving Club, and there has never been a program and seldom a race at any of the matinees but he has had an entry. He figures that his stable has cost him between $35,000 and $40,000 and gives as a reason for selling that he is the member of a company that is going to build another big tourist hotel at Santa Barbara, which, with the Van Nuys, will require all his time. Mr. Potter owns about twenty trotters and pacers, the star of the string being the four year old McKinney mare Sweet Marie, that won a heat at one of the matinees in 2:13½ and two heats in 2:14 flat in another. This mare is good for a record below 2:10 next year and there are many horsemen who think that 2:05 will not stop her. Mr. Potter values her at $10,000, but she will be sold without reserve and will go to the highest bidder. There are several very valuable colts and fillies by McKinney 2:11½, Zombro 2:11 and other famous stallions, and about fifteen head of as finely bred yearlings as there are in the State. Mr. Potter's retirement will be a great loss to the sport of matinee racing in Southern California.

Nearly half a million dollars worth of horses were sold at the Old Glory sale in New York. The sale lasted nine days, and $495,440 was the sum total received for 932 head, an average price of $531.50 for each horse sold. These were the horses catalogued, but in addition a number of ponies, wagons, sulkies, harness, etc., were disposed of, so that the total amount of money taken in was in excess of a half million dollars. This breaks all records for a sale of harness horses, and the prices received are a better gauge of the market than any other set of figures that can be arranged. Directum brought the high price of the sale, $12,100, and was dead lame at that. Bi Flora, a green mare that never started in any sort of a race, fetched $6000. The prices were good throughout. There is no other place in the world, in all probability, where a thousand horses can be sold at such prices, and New York is beyond dispute the market that sets the value on horses, as it does in many other lines of trade and business. It is surprising how many high priced trotters went to the bid of men who wanted them solely for speedway purposes. Peter Stirling 2:11½, the champion three year old of the year and one of the great racing prospects for the future, brought $9200 for a road horse, the veteran driver Frank Work making this bid. Two gentlemen who desired to secure Peter Stirling for racing purposes, were delayed by a snow blockade and failed to reach the salesring in time to bid, but both made Mr. Work advance offers for the horse, which he declined. The sale is conclusive evidence that road driving, matinee racing and campaigning for purses will not lose any of their popularity next season, but that more horses will be used in those sports than ever.

Charles Jeffries, who blossomed out as a starter on the Northern Circuit this year and scored a complete success, sat in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN editorial rooms last Thursday and talked about the prospects of racing in Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana next year. "There will be a circuit of twelve weeks at least and $1000 purses will be numerous," said he. Mr. Jeffries has been engaged to manage the racing end of the big annual fair held at Spokane, Washington, and as he knows the game thoroughly, is energetic and progressive, and is backed by one of the most enterprising associations in the North, it need occasion no surprise if Spokane in the very near future gives meetings that will vie with those on the Grand Circuit over east. The fair there this year cleared between seventeen and eighteen thousand dollars and this without a cent of State aid. Secretary Bolster and each and every director on the board spared neither time nor energy to make the fair a success and the result was a magnificent exhibit in every department, successful racing and big crowds every day. There seems to be plenty of money in circulation up north and the meetings next year at Portland and Salem, Oregon; Seattle, Spokane, North Yakima and Everett, Washington; Vancouver and Victoria, B. C.; Boise, Idaho, and other points will offer great attractions for harness horses in the way of purses of good proportions to trot and pace for. Mr. Jeffries has just returned from a trip to Los Angeles and may go back next week to attend the Potter sale. He has been on the lookout for a few trotting and pacing prospects for northern parties, but says that many owners here in California have suddenly jumped up the prices of their horses above the figures that buyers can afford to pay. A mare with a record that was for sale last year at $1000 is now priced at $1750, and several that were going begging last season at $500 are now put in the $1000 list by owners. There is great danger that those who have horses to sell will check the demand by the sudden raise in prices asked. Mr. Jeffries was at the Salem Fair this year and says that the California stallion Zombro 2:11, was admired by every horseman who looked him over there, and that it was the general opinion that no handsomer stallion ever stood for service there. The trotter Mack Mack 2:29½, by McKinney that Chris. Simpson owns and Henry Hellman will race next year, Mr. Jeffries thinks is a coming racehorse. He says he can surely beat 2:20, and is level headed and game in his races. John Pender's stallion Captain Jones is also highly thought of in Oregon and has some very handsome and promising colts. The tracks in Oregon and Washington are not as fast as those in California as the frequent rains make them a little heavy, but they are safe and horses are very seldom knocked out by working over them. The half mile track at Everett is one of the best appointed in any country. The grounds are all lighted by electricity and there is an incandescent light at the door of every stall. There will be an opportunity offered for trotters and pacers to win good money up north in 1902, and the outlook is for a very successful circuit. The Spokane association will aim to hold the greatest fair ever given in the northwestern portion of the United States.

It is said that another of the produce of Lettie, dam of Welcome 2:10½, entered the standard list over in Nevada this year. My informant did not remember the name or sex of the newcomer to the list, but believes the information as to the occurrence is correct. If so, Lettie is now the dam of four standard performers. She is a member of a most remarkable family. Her dam is Mary by Flaxtail, the dam of Apex 2:26 and of Sterling, sire of four in the list. One of Mary's daughters, Grace by Buccaneer produced Daedalion 2:11, Creole 2:15, and Eagle 2:19½, and also produced Ripple, the grandam of Sir Albert S. 2:08½. Mary's daughter Lettie by Wayland Forrest produced Welcome 2:10½ pacing, 2:27½, trotting, and Wayland W. 2:12½, and Maud Singleton 2:28½, both trotters. One of Lettie's daughters is the dam of Silver Ring 2:14½, and her son, Wayland W., is the sire of Arthur W. 2:11½ and John A. 2:12½. Another foal of Mary's when she was being bred to Buccaneer, was Gazelle, and Gazelle produced Algenie, the dam of Kelly Briggs 2:10½. Mary is the only mare, I believe, that has two daughters that have produced two 2:15 performers. The family founded by this daughter of Flaxtail is one of the greatest producers of extreme speed there is on record.

Cresceus at Los Angeles To Day.

To-day the champion stallion Cresceus 2:02½ will attempt to lower the Los Angeles track trotting record of 2:05, made by Alix 2:03½ several years ago, and incidentally to lower his own record. The latter feat few horsemen believe he can possibly accomplish at this time of the year, but the former may be within his reach, although to expect a stallion that has been keyed up since last June to perform such feat is asking too much. He will trot a wonderful mile if he rounds the track in 2:07.

There will be two regular racing events on the card in addition to the efforts against time. The entries for these races are as follows:

Pace, 2:10—Cœur de Lion 2:11½, Hanford Medium 2:11½, Montecito Boy 2:16½, Scappoose 2:16½.

Trot, 2:14—General Wilde 2:15, Medico 2:16½, Maggie McKinney 2:17½, Vendome 2:21.

George W. Ford will send his great stallion, Neernut 2:12½, against time, and from recent trials made, Mr. Ford expects to give the horse a new mark under 2:10.

The very important matter of timers has been settled by the appointment of the veteran horseman, C. A. Winship, together with Dr. Ralph Hagan and F. E. Browne of the Driving Club. All of them are adepts at handling the watch and the public will know that there will be no juggling with the time. While the judges are not yet named, it is understood that two prominent members of the Driving Club and a well known Eastern horseman now at the Van Nuys, will be in the judges' box, and will see that the attempt to lower the record will be made under the fairest conditions.

The track is in the very best condition, the horse could not be in better shape; the owner, who is the driver, is confident, and those in charge are hopeful that the record will be lowered.

Cresceus has been taking his regular work every day at Agricultural Park, and a well-known member of the Los Angeles Driving Club claims to have caught the king's time for the quarter at 29½ one morning this week when Ketcham let the horse out.

Mr. Ketcham thinks his chances of making a new world's record are excellent owing to the condition of the track at the fair grounds. Seen the other day he said:

"This is a good track if put into the condition I wish to have it when Cresceus travels against his time. It should be harrowed, sprinkled and then wire-nail harrowed. If this is done right, I see no reason why Cresceus cannot come up to his time. He is right in every respect now; I feel fine myself, and as it is the last chance the horse will have before he goes to the stud, the public may depend that if he can lower his time he will do it."

Mr. Ketcham's remark that he is feeling fine is more significant than would be supposed by the lay mind. To one who does not know it would seem to bave nothing to do with Cresceus lowering his record, but one who has driven knows the peculiar sympathy between horse and driver, and such can understand what Ketcham means.

Among the prizes secured at the New York sale was the yearling, Life Insurance, for if there is a better bred one he would be difficult to find. He is by Bow Bells 2:19½, a son of Electioneer and the great Beautiful Bells, and thus combining the blood of Green Mountain Maid and Minnehaha. His dam is by Prodigal 2:16, he by Pancoast 2:21½ out of the great broodmare Beatrice by Cyler; second dam Hattie D. (3) 2:26½, she by Electioneer out of a producing daughter of Nutwood 2:18½, and next dam the great broodmare Addie 2:39. This fellow, however, was not bought for his breeding as much as for his great individuality. He will be carefully raised and banded, with a view of placing him at the head of a great breeding farm near St. Joseph, Mo.

In bot weather there is no drink like Jackson's Napa Soda—plain in a lemonade.

Old Mares as Speed Producers.

A correspondent asks us to answer the following:

"A man professing to be well posted in the breeding of old and young mares and the result, says that when a mare is sixteen years old that she is unfit to breed, so far as speed producing goes.

How many fast and good performers can you name that are out of sixteen year old mares or over? Kindly inform me in your next issue."

To name all the mares sixteen years old or over that have produced extreme speed and good race horses would require more time and space than we can spare to dig through the Year Books and print the result. We will state off hand, however, without taking the trouble to make out a list, that the books are full of instances where old mares have produced very fast performers. Katie G. by Electioneer, for instance, at the age of seventeen produced Klatawah, whose three year old pacing record of 2:05½ is still unbeaten. Beautiful Bells 2:29½ by The Moor was foaled in 1872, and was consequently sixteen years old in 1888, yet in 1889 she produced Belleflower, that took a two year old record of 2:24½, a three year old record of 2:16½ and a four year old record of 2:12½. The following year she produced Bell Bird, that took a yearling record of 2:26½ and a two year old mark of 2:22. In 1891 she foaled Belsire 2:18 that is a producing sire. Two years later, when Beautiful Bells was twenty-one years of age she produced Adbell 2:23, the champion trotting yearling of the world and one of the most highly prized stallions in America. Miss Russell's fastest performer, outside of Maud S., was Rustique 2:18½ and the old mare was twenty-three when he was foaled. Dame Winnie produced Paola 2:18 at sixteen years and Altivo 2:18½, at eighteen. Elaine was eighteen when she produced Iran Alto 2:12½, the sire of Dr. Frasse 2:12½. The best four year old that appeared on the California circuit this year was Thomas R 2:15 and his dam, old Ydrel by Nutwood, was foaled in 1882. Sontag Dixie produced Pasonte 2:13 when she was twenty-one, and the champion pacing stallion of the world, Star Pointer 1:59½, was brought into the world when his mother, old Sweepstakes, was eighteen years of age. We might go on with this list, but we think we have shown that sixteen years is not the age at which a healthy, vigorous mare should be retired from the stud. Had this been the rule, the two minute pacer would not yet have been bred, and the records of the champion yearling trotter and the champion three year old pacer would not have been as fast as those of Adbell and Klatawah.

The Age of Horses.

Horses occasionally reach a great age. On October 9, 1872, a horse belonging to Mr. Auldjo of Cowes, Isle of Wight, died at the age of thirty-five years. He had been a pensioner for some time before his death, not from infirmity, but because he had earned rest after a long life of work. Mr. Tay, a livery stable keeper in Birmingham, lost a mare thirty-eight years old on January 9, 1864; she worked constantly, and often hard, to the last. In November, 1866, the Inverness Courier mentioned that a thirty-four-year-old horse, belonging to a Mr. Cumming, was still in work. The veteran had done twenty-six years' work in a coach team between Perth and Auchterarder. Mons. Colles-Gattlelet, the Conseil-General of the Meuse Department, in 1862 lost an old favorite at the age of forty-five. The record of horses, however, is held by Old Paramatta, the property of Mr. Joseph Kaye of New South Wales. Old Paramatta died on August 3, 1874, aged fifty-three, a victim to the severe winter. He did an occasional day's work to within a few weeks of his death. It may be added that the age of this horse was well authenticated, as when he arrived at his fifty-first year pains were taken to ascertain when he was foaled. More cases of ponies than of horses reaching great length of years are recorded, and greater ages seem to be attained by ponies. Mr. Edmund F. Dease of Gaultstown, County Westmeath, in December, 1894, lost a pony nearly thirty-nine years old; he had been ridden by four generations of his owner's family. In 1896 a pony mare belonging to Mrs. Pratt, Low Pond House, Bedale, Yorks, died aged forty-five years. The pony record in age, however, comes from Devonshire. On Christmas Day, 1863, Mr. Dampier, of Silwarthy, near Clovelly, lost a pony who was within a few weeks of his sixtieth year. He was touched in the wind, but was otherwise sound. —London Live Stock Journal.

Mr. John H. Shults is now the fortunate owner of ten mares with records of 2:10 and better, twenty-two with records of 2:14 and better and of thirty-six with records of 2:30 and better. The list includes Sunol 2:08½, who is in foal by The Earl; Belleflower, who is in foal by Axworthy, and Lena N., who is in foal by The Earl. Sunland Belle 2:08½, a recent purchase, will be bred to Directly. From mares of this stamp bred to prepotent stallions, Mr. Shults should produce the highest rate of speed. There was never so much quality in his breeding stud as at the present moment.

A Great Dispersal Sale.

The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN calls attention to the announcement in its business columns of the dispersal sale of the stable of Milo M. Potter, Esq., of Los Angeles, Cal., which will take place at Agricultural Park, that city, on the morning of Thursday, December 19th. While it is to be regretted that Mr. Potter feels called upon to dispose of his stable and that such a collection must be dispersed, California horsemen are to be congratulated on the opportunity thus offered to buy the best on the coast at their own figures. The collection represents the very cream of trotting stock in Southern California and it is doubtful if another such collection or more representative lot can be found on the Pacific Coast. Mr. Potter devoted much time and much more thought to his efforts to get together a stable representative of the best on earth. A stickler for individuality and soundness, he has not neglected the study of blood lines and pedigree, and the result, after many weeding-out processes, is a stable containing none but handsome individuals, carrying the blood of the sires and dams which have made the California light harness horse famous throughout the world. The breeding industry and the sport of amateur racing can ill afford to lose a man of Mr. Potter's calibre, but increased business cares which include the building of a magnificent new hotel at Santa Barbara, make it necessary for him to forego the pleasure derived from maintaining a stable such as his. He has therefore authorized the absolute sale of his entire stable, nearly forty head in all, with the exception of three heavy harness horses reserved for the use of his own family. The stock is pledged to absolute sale. There will be no reserve figure nor by-bidding, and every animal offered will be sold to the highest bidder regardless of the amount of that bid, whether commensurate with the value of the horse or no.

The star of the stable is the crack matinee trotter of the coast and probably the greatest green trotter in the world. This is Sweet Marie, a daughter of the great McKinney 2:11½, and Lady Rivers, by Carr's Mambrino. Foaled in 1896, she was used on the road until October, 1900, when she fell into Mr. Potter's hands. Under his training she developed rapidly and before being turned out to grass last July won four matinee races, one in 2:14, 2:14, stepping one-half in 1:04. In her work she showed four consecutive heats in 2:14, 2:13½, 2:12½, 2:12½, with the regulation twenty minutes between heats. She was taken up five weeks ago and has since been a half in 1:05, a quarter in 31½ seconds. Mr. Potter expects her to show a half close to 1:02 by sale day, and a quarter close to 30 seconds. She is absolutely sound, level headed, good gaited, game and exceedingly fast.

Another member of the consignment that will attract attention is the three year old pacing filly, Sweetheart. Since she was taken up five weeks ago she has stepped three heats below 2:20 in a matinee, and on Dec. 6th showed a quarter in 32 seconds in the presence of several well-known Eastern horsemen. A sensational two year old filly to be offered is You See, by Adjutant, she having shown a quarter in 30 seconds last spring before being turned out. Another great two year old, by Sky Pointer (brother of Star Pointer, 1:59½) out of a daughter of McKinney 2:11½, stepped a quarter in 31 seconds at the same time. There are several other fast trotters and pacers with well authenticated trials and matinee records in the consignment including mares by McKinney 2:11½, Zombro 2:11, Zolock 2:10½, St. Vincent 2:13½, Charleston 2:12½, and other such sires. Catalogues of the sale may be obtained by addressing E. J. Tranter, Hotel Van Nuys, Los Angeles, Cal.

Gen. Tracy to Sell Out.

Gen. B. F. Tracy, ex-Secretary of the Navy, and one of the most widely known admirers of the light harness horse, has decided to dispose of his breeding establishment. He is quoted as saying:

"Yes, it is true I have made up my mind to dispose of my trotting stud. I am obliged to sell them, because I have not room for all, and it would be no good attempting to sell some, or it might be considered a weeding out sale. When I leased Stony Ford with its 700 acres I believed I would be able to keep it all my life, but when the owner died the freehold was sold and I had to move. The place I now occupy adjoins Stony Ford. It is only half the size of it and has no name. I call my stud the Marshland stud, because that is the name of my place in Tioga county.

"I shall perhaps keep a few woinlings, which will be yearlings on the first of January, but my stallions and brood mares will all go. I think a great deal of Advertiser, in fact, believe he is one of the best horses in the country, but this is a good time to sell. Trotters are worth more than ever just now, as the good prices obtained at the Old Glory sale prove. It is wonderful how the prices kept up there, and in cases like that of Miss Previous records were made.

A Great Race Expected in 1902.

From present indications the race for the Boston Challenge Trophy in 1902 promises to be a contest that in point of fast time, and the class of trotting stars expected to compete, will prove one of the most interesting and sensational trotting races the coming season. It is stated on good authority that the Eastern amateur reinsmen will make a strenuous effort to wrench the coveted trophy, and the honors connected with its possession, from the Gentlemen's Driving Club of Cleveland, and among the great trotters that will be probable starters can be mentioned J. J. Scannell's Tho Abbot 2:03½, Chas. C. Lloyd's Chain Shot 2:06½, E. E. Smather's Lord Derby 2:06½, T. W. Lawson's Boralma 2:07 and several others. It is expected that C. K. G. Billings' Lucille 2:07, to wagon, will also be in good condition again next year, and in case her owner does not believe her good enough to represent his stable in this contest, it is certain that Mr. Billings will be in line with some other fast one.

Although the race is yet a long way off, yet it promises to be a battle royal, and as it is necessary that H. K. Devereux's great wagon trotter, John A. McKerron, again win the cup in order to have it become the property of the Gentlemen's Driving Club of Cleveland, the Cleveland matinee enthusiasts are confident that after the smoke of the battle has cleared away victory will be found perched on the banner of the pioneer matinee club of the country. The fact that McKerron has won every heat of the various wagon races in which he has entered, and his remarkable mile in 2:06½ to wagon in September, under conditions anything but favorable for fast time, would certainly make it seem that the confidence of his many admirers in predicting that he will win the Boston cup for the third consecutive year is well founded. —American Sportsman.

Peculiarly Bred Colt.

A black colt, foaled in Indiana about four weeks ago, is entitled to more than ordinary share of public attention. He was sired by Cresceus 2:02½ out of Mary Centlivre 2:12, by R. C. Brown, son of Florida, second dam Carrie Blackwood, also dam of Atlantic King 2:09½, Major Centlivre 2:10½ and Carrie Strathmore 2:17½ by Blue Bull. Mary Centlivre died a few hours after giving birth to the colt, and the youngster is being raised by a foster mother that was induced to adopt him, she being just ready to wean her own foal. The family of Carrie Blackwood is a somewhat remarkable one, and this colt, by the champion trotting stallion, should turn out to be an unusually good one. He has not a drop of the blood of either George Wilkes, Electioneer, Nutwood or Mambrino Patchen. He gets a dash of Almont blood and a dash of Mambrino Chief blood through Cresceus, but his blood lines are mainly Hambletonian-Star and Blue Bull. Robert McGregor, the sire of Cresceus, was Hambletonian-Star in breeding, and R. C. Brown, the sire of Mary Centlivre, was a son of Florida, he by Hambletonian 10, dam by Volunteer, second dam by American Star. It is doubtful if Blue Bull sired a better mare than Carrie Blackwood, so that this colt should develop into a stallion that should suit the admirers of the old Indiana sire. —Horse World.

The Means to an End.

People who are really interested in sport, and who love a horse as a horse and not because he represents a convenient excuse for gambling, are always interested in training, says a turf writer. For the man outside, a race seems to be the whole occupation of a race horse, but for the man who knows, the race is only the climax, only the object which is attained by weary labor, great thought and the exercise of abnormal patience. What anxieties are involved and experienced by those who train horses nobody except a trainer can possibly know. For, contrary to public belief, horses are not machines, and they cannot be treated all alike. One horse may require strong, hard work and plenty of it, and another may thrive better on half the work, and in some instances, upon almost half the food which his more robust companion desires.

A Buffalo paper states: "Henry C. Jewett of the Jewett Farm attended the sale in New York the past week. Advice received at East Aurora say Mr. Jewett purchased the stallion Ponce de Leon, by Pancoast, from Thomas W. Lawson's representatives, who bid him in at $6500. Mr. Jewett is said to have paid a good sized advance and also to have bought several mares. It is said to be his intention to again go into the breeding business, raising coach and carriage horses principally. If this be correct, there will be a notable addition to the lists of Western New York stock farms."

Like all good things, Jackson's Napa Soda has a dozen counterfeits. Watch out!

$50,000 Refused for The Commoner.

Gen. Jackson recently refused to part with The Commoner, sire of so many of the season's good two year olds, although he was offered $50,000 in exchange for him.

And thereby hangs a tale which proves that even the shrewdest of horsemen may sometimes underrate the value of a thoroughbred.

When The Commoner, after racing in the colors of W. M. Wallace for a couple of years, broke down in a race at Morris Park, his owner tried to dispose of him for $500.

"I can't use him, because I have no broodmares to breed him to," said Mr. Wallace at the time, "but Mr. Keene, Mr. Whitney or anybody else who is willing to take a chance with him in the stud will find The Commoner a very cheap horse."

But Mr. Wallace could not induce any breeder to take an interest in the good son of Hanover-Margerie, and The Commoner was fired and given a long rest. This was in 1895.

The Commoner "came back" as a four year old and ran second to Henry of Navarre in the Suburban of 1896.

Mr. Wallace sold The Commoner a couple of years ago to Kinzea Stone and others for $5025. He did so knowing that he was as well bred a horse as there was in the country at the time, and which might prove a great stallion. But Mr. Wallace needed the money.

Every youngster sent to the races by The Commoner this year has added to the value of the son of Hanover as a sire. Doyle's Commoner (who died the other day), Bell's Commoner, Wainomoin, Leflare and others of his get have been consistent winners, and there has been no disappointment in the lot.

The Commoner had only a few two year olds out last year, but these included Jiminez and Maude Gonne, who won many races.

As a yearling The Commoner was purchased by Al Stoufel from the Stanhope Brothers, who bred him for $600. On the strength of a sensational time performance in which he negotiated three furlongs in 36½ seconds, without any juggling with the furlong poles, Byron McClelland purchased the youngster for $3000.

McClelland won several races with The Commoner, and finally sold him to Wallace for $5000, after he had developed a tendency to cut up capers at the post.

In his two and three year old form The Commoner met and defeated some of the best of his age, and showed his quality as a sprinter by beating the then aged Geraldine when she was good.

After McClelland sold The Commoner to Wallace he still had another son of Hanover with which he expected to win most of the three year old stakes, including the American Derby of 1895. This was the black whirlwind, Halma, afterward sold to Hon. Charles Fleischman and finally disposed of by his sons to Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt for stud duty in France.

Wallace had an idea that The Commoner could beat Halma, and started him against that colt in a race in Lexington. The race was at a mile and an eighth, and was conceded to be a duel between the two sons of Hanover. Many turfmen who witnessed the race declare that it was as magnificent a contest as was ever seen in this country. Halma won by a narrow margin in the fast time of 1:52½. In estimating the merit of the race it should be borne in mind that the Lexington race track was never as fast as any of the tracks around New York, and six years ago a mile and an eighth over a circular track was nothing short of phenomenal.

"Outside of the friendly rivalry between myself and Mr. McClelland," said Mr. Wallace, in speaking of the Halma-The Commoner duel the other day, "we had another object in having the two horses meet in a bruising race. Both were entered for the American Derby, and we wanted to see which was best. If Halma could trim The Commoner, I didn't want to send my horse to the post, and I don't think Mr. McClelland would clash with me in future events providing I had the best horse. At any rate, we satisfied ourselves on that point. The American Derby of 1895 was declared off, however, and the principal object of the meeting of Halma and The Commoner was therefore defeated.

"I fully expected to win the Suburban of 1896 with The Commoner, but again I was stacked up against a horse developed by Byron McClelland, Henry of Navarre. At that The Commoner finished second to Navarre after cutting a caper at the flag which gave him all the worst of the start.

"He deliberately wheeled about the wrong way as the flag fell, and when he got in his stride the rest of the bunch were on their way. The Commoner was penalized for winning a race at Oakland, else he would have got in the Suburban at 108, instead of 115 pounds.

As a Suburban winner, The Commoner would have been considered a good proposition for stud purposes, but as a horse who would have won under more favorable conditions the wise turfmen of the East couldn't see him. I tried to sell him to an English breeder, and actually had an offer of $10,000 for him before I sold him for half that sum. But one of the conditions of the deal was that The Commoner be examined as to his soundness. That settled it, for The Commoner was not a sound horse though in this country that should not affect his value as a stallion. The fact that Rhoda B., a full sister of The Commoner, has won many stake races in England attracted attention of English breeders to the son of Hanover, but they wanted no part of him when they learned that he wasn't sound. It is quite possible, however, that considerable attention will be paid my good old horse hereafter, 'or he's going to be a pretty good sire to follow, judging by the performances of the youngsters he sent to the races this year.

Concerning Touts.

The "tout" has long been an institution on the turf. Wherever there is racing where the crowds gather and "the hullets fly the thickest" the tout is on the ground to play his part. His appearance on the turf is as old as the institution itself. No doubt when Diomed won the first English Derby close to a century ago the advisors were present and probably some of the guild picked the winner that was afterwards imported to Virginia and founded what is known as the American strain of thoroughbreds. The appellation of "tout" is applied indiscriminately to all advisors and venders of information on turf matters.

In this connection it is well to understand that there are two varieties of advisors, the good and the bad, the reliable and the unreliable. The one is a man conscientious, faithful and capable. He is a recognized factor on the turf, and while he plies his profession he holds the respect of all manner of turfmen from the magnate to his humblest client. The other is an entirely different proposition. He knows nothing, cares nothing and the wares that he vends are worthless.

The reliable tipster is a man who is up at the peep o' day and, watch in hand, marks the work of every horse tried during the day. When the day dawns and before the race track cock has given out his first salutation to the morning he is at his post. He can recognize a racer with a blanket a mile away. He is trustworthy and industrious, and his clients are turfmen of the highest class.

The information of this class of tipster is invaluable both to player and layer. Whatever occurs on the track while others are in bed their employers know. The plunger and moderate subscriber alike are informed in advance whether a racer is lame, coughing or sore. A fast trial is reported at once, and a subscriber can sip his coffee with contentment, knowing the news of the race track before he reaches the grounds. If the reliable tipster chooses to increase his business by advertising his wares he is well within his ground. He works for it, is capable and he "furnishes the goods." His clients have a far better chance than if they made their own selections, and he earns his fee.

The well known plunger Pittsburg Phil has a man of this variety on his staff all during the racing season, and there are many others.

On the other hand, the irresponsible class are charlatans and know nothing.

In England, of course, where this fraternity first flourished and got their name, there are many varieties of the genus. Besides the reliable adviser that is respected there is the grotesquely attired dispenser of information, with his loud voice and worthless wares. The same class flourishes here, and their methods are much like unto those of their English brethren.

In the last score of years, however, the system has undergone considerable change. Especially is this noticeable on the metropolitan tracks. And the change has been for the better. The class of hangers on, leeches and pests that know nothing more of a race horse than a donkey, is fast disappearing. This class, with the impudence of a screech owl and the gruffness of a bear, would approach any man on the lawn or betting ring and hand out his worthless tips.

As I have said, this class is fast disappearing, the cause being partly the admirable surveillance of the Pinkerton men and the growing knowledge of the average racegoer.

This end of the touting game, with all of its objectionableness, often had its humorous side. At Washington on one occasion an English gentleman had a horse sporting his colors in the first race. Dressed in faultless style, with monocle adjusted, viewing the odds on the nearest slate, he looked every inch the real thing. He seemed a good mark, and Range Billy, an alert member of the irresponsible end of the fraternity, picked him out at once.

"Me Lord," said Billy (the gentleman's name was Gallop), "I have got a sure thing in this race, and you had better put a bet on it."

"What's your horse, my lad?" drawled Mr. Gallop.

"Orphan Girl, sir, and she can't lose. I saw her burn the track up the other morning."

"Why, that's my nag, my boy, and she hasn't worked fast enough to give her a chance," was the reply.

"Don't you believe it, sir. I saw her work a mile in 1:40 without taking a long breath," said Billy, entirely unabashed.

His earnest and vehement manner carried the day, and the Englishman backed the mare against his will. The odds were 15 to 1, and he put a couple of centuries on. Orphan Girl won and Billy was in clover for the balance of the meeting.

The ebony-hued "Swallager" who in the good old days passed over the horizon of the turf was a rich card among the shiftless division of touts. He dreamed his winners, and with a mysterious air he would approach his unsuspecting victim and relate his dream. If his man had a germ of superstition in his make-up he would fall to the tip. On leaving his man after the bet was made "Swallager" would stealthily chalk a mark on his back and walk away. After the race, if the bet won, the darky, who could not remember faces, would make the tour of the ring behind the betting booths, and if he saw any chalk-marked backs he would offer his congratulations and ask for a little something for his dream.

With all their ignorance of horses and precarious mode of life, this variety was rarely if ever a "piker," and a good story is told of "Shakespeare," a once well-known member of the division.

During the Baltimore races in 1884 he wired a client in New York to come on at once and bring plenty of money, as he had the game right. When his friend arrived he was met at the depot and warmly greeted.

"Well," said "Shakespeare," "I hope you brought the dough with you—how much, eh, old man?"

"I've got $10,000 with me," was the reply.

"Jerusalem!" exclaimed "Shakespeare." "Suppose we lose the first race?"—Kinford in Daily American.

Late Racing Unpopular in the East.

An Eastern correspondent writes: Fall race meetings are getting gradually into worse disrepute. There is always a bad taste in the mouths of racegoers about Chicago when they discuss the November meetings held at Lakeside, and now there is constant growling in the East over the meetings held at Aqueduct and Benning.

A leading bookmaker in the East is quoted in a New York dispatch as saying: "The public, during the last two months, received some hard knocks, and it did not do the game any good. It's hard enough to beat the races when everything is on the level, but when a few owners and plungers get their heads together the hookmakers suffer just as much as the bettors who figure out supposed winners on form."

Horsemen who came back from the Washington meeting say the promoters of it reaped a big financial harvest, but that things were virtually run by a couple of heavy bettors and a combination of owners, who simply went after the money, regardless of form or public opinion. The stewards, it is said, had their suspicions, but that was all. They could not prove anything, and so their hands were tied.

The profits of the fifteen-day meeting at Lakeside are said to have been $90,000, and while there was no more talk of in-and-out running than generally prevails at race tracks, the discontent against Lakeside methods grew, and it is probable that the last of "syndicate ring" racing about Chicago has been seen. As a horseman expressed it, "there is too great a demand for racing dates around Chicago now to tolerate any longer this emergency system of betting, which can only be excused where racing cannot live without it."

Some Eastern turf critics express the opinion that affairs at the Bennings meeting may be taken up and investigated this winter by the Jockey Club. According to report the Bennings track belongs to August Belmont, and, considering the latter's reputation, turfmen would not expect him to remain idle if any serious scandal was circulated against associations with which he is connected.

At the same time certain Western turf officials have not forgotten the attitude assumed by Mr. Belmont a year ago, when the clash came up between the Western Turf Congress and the Eastern Jockey Club on the dates of the Bennings meeting. Turf Congress rules fixed November 15 as the close of the legitimate racing season, but the Eastern Jockey Club licensed Bennings to run to a later date.

Then Associate Judge McDowell and Starter Fitzgerald, who were to officiate all winter at New Orleans, appealed to the Turf Congress for permission to serve at Bennings. At first the request was declined, for the Turf Congress officials knew how long and hard had been the fight in the West against the winter racing evil and over racing in general. But when Mr. Belmont heard of this decision he announced that if any one racing at Bennings was discriminated against at New Orleans every horse and man racing at New Orleans would be barred off the Jockey Club tracks. This settled it, and the Turf Congress weakened.

EASTERN NOTES AND NEWS.

Sir Alcantara 2:05½ died recently.

The New York State Fair is about $20,000 behind on the year.

Shadow Chimes 2:06½ is the fastest horse ever sent to Europe.

The Dan Patch Quickstep is the latest thing in the musical line.

Geo. Saunders, of Cleveland, is recovering from a serious illness.

Thomas Lawson is evidently not going to quit the trotters right away.

The trotting-bred horses were strictly "in it" at the National Horse Show.

Ashland Wilkes has eighteen new ones in the list. The latest is Susiana 2:29½.

William Mc 2:05½ recently set the track record at Jacksonville, Fla., at 2:09½.

Frank B. Walker is reported as stating that Cresceus, at 2:02½, is "marked for life."

Benny Kenny says of Nancy Hanks 2:04: "She was notional, but I never lost a race with her."

J. M. Johnson, Calais, Me., will breed Directress 2:19, whom he bought at the Fasig-Tipton sale, to Bingen 2:00½.

The Abbot 2:03½ and the balance of Ed Geers' horses will probably go to the Jewett covered track about January 1st.

A Newark, Ohio, horseman recently brought suit against a trotting association for declaring his horse distanced. He lost.

When an owner gets to thinking that his stallion is not appreciated he should quit grieving and begin advertising the horse.

Ed Geers was out on the New York speedway with Lord Derby one day recently and was taken into camp by King Chimes 2:10½.

The standard colt trotters and pacers of the year foot up 141. There were 30 two-year-olds, 67 three-year-olds and 44 four-year-olds.

Star Pointer still holds the record for the fastest first heat in a race at 2:02 and the fastest mile in a race, which was a third heat, in 2:00½.

Four three year old trotters entered the 2:15 list this year—Peter Stirling 2:11½, Hawthorne 2:13, Admiral Dewey 2:14½, and Carrie Bel 2:14½.

The sensational two year old Todd, by Blingen, out of Fanella 2:22½, by Arion, was bred to five mares last spring and four of them are with foal.

Joe Rhea has engaged to train with Senator Bailey, of Texas, and he has gone to Lexington to take charge of the Senator's horses that are stabled there.

There was only one bid made for Adhell (1) 2:23 and that seemed to paralyze the crowd. John Madden secured him for $10,000, and got a bargain at that.

The Baron Wilkes mare, Dulce Cor, who has trotted a mile in 2:10½, is now owned by R. H. Plant of Macon, Ga. Roy Miller will try to get her ready for the M. and M.

Bertie R. 2:12½, who is famous for holding the world's trotting record for four miles, has been hooked to Be Sure 2:06½, owned by Franklin Megargee of Coatesville, Pa.

Captain H. B. Tuthill of Goshen, N. Y., has an eight months old filly by Star Pointer 1:59½ out of Lottie Loraine 2:05½, that promises to develop into a phenomenal side wheeler.

John Splan has secured several first-class consignments to his opening sale at the new Coliseum building, Chicago, in January, and that the same will prove successful is an assured fact.

J. Malcolm Forbes picked up a bargain when Ellorce fell to his bid of $2600. The handsome daughter of Axtell cannot fail to produce something fast from Bingen, Peter the Great, Arion or Admiral Dewey.

It is very doubtful if W. B. Fasig will ever regain such a condition of good health as will enable him to give active attention to his business. At the present time he is confined to his bed at his home at Brewster, New York.

It is rumored that James Butler is negotiating with John Kelley with a view to securing the services of that reinsman next season. John formerly had charge of the training at East View Farm, and no man ever had more success there.

Dan R. 2:08, which has rather a remarkable history having once been sold for as little as $60 but made speed fast and was something of a sensation at the late Lexington and Memphis meetings, has been sold to Charles Preston, New York, for a price said to be $5000.

George H. Ketcham, owner of Cresceus, has bought of F. W. Williamson of Richmond, Ind., the great brood mare, Grey Fannie, dam of Ruby Mack 2:08½, Lady Coleridge 2:16½ and Joe Redwood 2:15½, and he has also bought of Mr. Williamson another great brood mare, Nettle, dam of Grasshopper 2:19½, Minetta 2:18, Miss Breiman 2:16½ and Miss Coleridge 2:19½.

James Walker says: "This swapping drivers has grown to be a fad. If you notice, it is only fashionable where bookmakers control the means of betting. Rather drive the pencil from the track and give us the old Paris mutuels, where the public makes the odds as a means of heat betting. Then and then only will we have less heat juggling."

Julius Pajoncek, Charlottenlund, Denmark, has recently purchased in Kentucky for exportation to his native land the following trotters: Alice Princeton by Princeton 2:19½, with foal at foot by Clay King and in foal to Libertine, son of Boreal; Nancy Embry by Ashland Wilkes 2:17½, dam Minerva by Warlock 2:24. The two mares are said to have cost with their foals around $2000.

"Dick" Benson, Kansas City, Mo., purchased several of the Daly horses at the Fasig-Tipton sale. His first purchase, Silk Exporter, is a bay stallion by Prodigal, out of Brown Silk 2:19½, daughter of Baron Wilkes. Benson paid $1000 for this fellow. For New Silk, a brown filly by Ponce de Leon, dam China Silk, 2:16½, he paid $1325, while for Silk Trader a bay colt by Prodigal, dam Red Silk, 2:10, he gave $1500.

Among the campaigners for 1905 will be such names as Pot Roast by Bow Bells, dam Pot Soiler by Prodigal; Tupshin by Ponce de Leon, dam Rhetta Wilkes by Electioneer; Red Paint by Ponce de Leon, Royal Swell by Bow Bells, King of Loafers by Prodigal. Shot and Shell by Prodigal, The Silent Voter, The People's Candidate, Prince of Spenders, Come Again, Skirt Dancer, Poker Ante and Pleasant Thought.

John L. Salvage, Roswell, Colo., says among the horses wintering there are Porto Rico 2:14, Red Jane 2:14½, Roy Day 2:13½. Roy Day has beaten 2:10 in a workout several times and it has been said by spectators that he is the best pacer in Colorado. If he had not met with an accident he would have a mark of 2:06 or better this fall. He is all right now and can show a 2:00 clip on any part of the road. McMinville Maid by Altamont is safely in foal to Hal Stratton, brother to Star Pointer.

"Dishonesty is no less opprobrious on the race track than in any other sphere of life," says the Trotter and Pacer. "When a bet is made it is obvious that one side must win and one side suffer. The man who hacks his judgment on a horse race and suffers in silence when his judgment is proved at fault is the manly man. The man who resorts to any method of winning a race except winning it fairly, or, as in this case, to a cheating subterfuge of laying up a heat to save the money he has got in wrong, only brings reproach upon the sport."

The chestnut gelding Jerry W. 2:18, alias Guy, Thomas W. and Red Doctor, who was exposed as a ringer at Port Huron, Mich., where he started under the name of Brandon, and that has since been in the hands of the sheriff on an attachment by the American Trotting Association on a claim of $650 for alleged illegal winnings, has been replevined by Coroner Falk at the instance of Edward F. Crosse of Cleveland who claims to have purchased the horse from his owner, Felix Reynolds, now awaiting trial on a criminal charge of fraudulently entering the horses in the races.

When the Philadelphia banker, Mr. E. T. Stotesbury, started in the horse show business very few blues drifted his way, says the Turf, Field and Farm. He accepted defeat gracefully and kept on trying to score. He sold his old horses and bought new ones of higher quality, and finally became invincible before competent judges. This year his roadsters have swept the field at Long Branch, Chicago, New York and elsewhere, and Mr. Stotesbury has been warmly congratulated by all who admire steadfastness of purpose. In the horse business, as well as in other fields of strife, success does not long remain with the faint-hearted.

The past season has been the greatest in history for the small breeders and the unsyndicated drivers of small means, says the American Sportsman. The largest money winners are those who were out "on their own hook." The million dollar stock farm owners, with high-salaried drivers, are no longer a menace to the profitable expansion of the harness turf. Even in the dizziest field of endeavor, the Grand Circuit, there is room enough for honest and meritorious competition. And in no Grand Circuit, for the past fifteen years, have the big money winners been more generously distributed among the turfmen of moderate incomes than during the season just closed.

The Overland Racing Association will make no effort to secure the Overland Park grounds. The Overland property is held at $150,000. The racing men figure they could buy and equip a better park and track for $50,000 if compelled to do so and therefore it would be foolish to invest three times the sum. A lease is held on the track for two years longer, during which races will be conducted there. If at the end of that time the ownership has so changed that a renewal is impossible, then racing men will take up the proposition of building a track of their own. The contract for resurfacing the Overland track has been let, the dirt to be placed before the ground freezes.

Attention is being called to the large number of horse show winners that carry the blood of Belmont, says the Horse World. There is nothing strange in this to anyone who is familiar with the characteristics of Belmont's family. No other branch of the Hambletonian family has furnished more good looking, high acting horses than this one. With good looks and the ability to act well a certain amount of vim is needed to enable the other qualities to be seen at the best advantage, and the Belmonts have it. Indeed, it has been said that members of Belmont's family were a little too fiery to be pleasant race horses, and while that may have been true in some cases, that same fiery disposition is just what is needed in a show horse.

Mocking Bird 2:16½ was sold at the Chicago sale for $100. She was foaled 1884, sired by Mambrino King, out of Mahel A. by Toronto Chief. The chestnut girl took her record at Terre Haute in 1890, and at one time was regarded as a prize in the lottery of trotters at Village Farm.

It has often been stated that even an ordinary stallion, well advertised, will prove a profitable investment. This being the case, what must one expect from the judicious advertising of a first class stallion? When a stallion is accomplishing something as a sire of speed, the breeding public wants to learn all it can concerning it. The more pronounced its success in the stud, the greater the necessity for consistent advertising. Allerton is a great sire, but would he have half as many in the list if Williams had never spent a dollar in printer's ink? A horse must be talked about if he is expected to prove successful either as a sire of speed or a money maker for his owner? The more he is talked about the better.—Western Horseman.

That Ed Geers has great faith in Lord Derby, the famous trotter, now owned by Mr. E. E. Smathers of New York, is evidenced by the remarks "the Siler Man from Tennessee" made to Derby's purchaser just after the auctioneer's gavel had fallen on the last bid. Mr. Smathers' trainer, George Spear, was also present and paid strict attention to the words of the Village Farm trainer, who said: "I want you to go careful with this horse, and I thoroughly think he will be the best trotter out next year. Don't reef him over that Speedway; jog him up there if you want, but don't start him up faster than a road gait. I tell you he is a very sensitive animal, and if you should go to racing him over the Speedway he would soon refuse to eat as well as he should. If you take care of him right you will find him capable of giving Cresceus and The Abbot a race next season."

Smuggler, in his old age, was once sold at auction. Stamboul was sold shortly after his championship record of 2:07½ (which was afterwards rejected) was made, and he brought $41,000, despite the fact that scandal was already busy with stories of the illegality of his performance. Directum, the third king of stallions to pass under the hammer—and under such conditions that he was the real "horse of the sale"—the one upon which the greatest interest centered, sold for $12,100. In "boom days" his sire sold privately for $75,000—and considering the prices then paid publicly for other horses, he would probably have brought as much, or more, under the hammer. He was then 15. In 1884, long before the "boom days" dawned, Dictator, the grandsire of Directum, brought $25,000 at private sale, when 21 years old. What is more, it was a profitable purchase. Dictator lived to be 30. Dictator is still living and potent, and will be 25 next spring. Directum is now but 12 years old.

As facts come out regarding the Canadian pacer, Harold H., it becomes more and more apparent that he is one of the most remarkable of the horses that have trained on to records below 2:05. This gelding, that heads the list of the new 2:10 pacers for 1901, made his first appearance in public at London, Ont., in June, 1900, since which time he has won fifteen races and been only twice unplaced out of a total of twenty starts in two seasons, earning almost $10,000. What is quite the feature of his eventful career is the fact that in 1899, when a five-year-old, he possessed no speed and was held in such little regard that he changed hands for $150. And the following year, when he came out at London and won his maiden start from a big field in straight heats, he had not shown enough to warrant his owner to keep him in preference to the $700 that was offered for him by his present owner. His speed after that must have come like lightning, for the end of the 1900 campaign found him better than a 2:10 horse, and his flights of speed this year, particularly at Terre Haute, where he paced a half in a minute and a quarter in 28½ seconds, indicate that he has not yet reached the limit of his speed.

An interesting story of Chehalis 2:04½ is told by J. L. McCarthy, of New York. He says that Frank Frazier got the colt when a two year old, but, being an absolute novice in the training business, he turned him over to a would be teamster, who all but spoiled him. Seeing how things were going, he brought him home and concluded to try it himself. Chehalis was a natural pacer, and once in a while would show an amazing burst of speed, but he seemed unable to get himself balanced. Frazier tried everything that he could think of without success in the effort to square away, and was near giving up the job when he read one day how Geers straightened a pacer out by shoeing him with twelve ounce shoes behind. He determined to try that, and set out at once for the only blacksmith shop in the vicinity, which was three miles from Pendleton, on the Indian reservation, the smith being a half breed. After a great amount of trouble he got Chehalis shod as he desired and the transformation was magical. He could pace like a streak from the word. As Frazier tells it, he raced two mounted cowboys all the way home, three miles, and beat them into town, Chehalis pacing all the way. He was "lightning" from that day. The use of hoppers on him was necessitated by the result of a foolish accident. He was being raced on the snow one day with a stable companion and hit one of his legs a terrific clip. He was laid up for a long time, and when he was first asked to extend himself afterward seemed to have lost all confidence and never regained it until he was finally put in the straps. As will be remembered, Frazier hung them very low on him and so loosely that he could run like a deer in them. In fact, he once offered to bet $500 that he could run him a quarter in 30 seconds with them on. Chehalis was one of the best trained horses that ever came across the Rockies. His intelligence was extreme and Frazier could do all sorts of circus tricks with him.

HORSES ARE SELLING at good prices all over the country and prices have an upward tendency. Harness race meetings were generally successful this year and horse shows were never more successful than those held this winter over East. The result of this condition of affairs is an increasing interest in horse breeding, developing and training. Men who own good mares are selecting the best stallions to mate them with next spring, and the owners of stock farms are attending the sales and replenishing their stock. The horse business is no longer in the slough of despond, but is basking in the sunshine of prosperity. One of the pleasant things to contemplate in this connection is the fact that there is a general waking up among the district agricultural boards of California with the idea predominant in their minds to hold better and bigger fairs next year than ever before. In the majority of instances the boards will have a two years' appropriation to draw upon and with the renewed interest in stock breeding of all kinds they are confident that the fairs of 1902 will attract more patronage from exhibitors and a larger attendance from the public than for years. It looks now as though there will be a circuit of fairs next year that will not only provide racing for all classes of harness horses, but will recall the old boom days when grand stands were not large enough to accommodate the crowds that desired to see the races. Of course much of this renewed interest will be the result of better times and a more prosperous condition of ordinary business affairs; but the greatest incentive to draw the people to the harness races will be the fact that trotters and pacers are daily growing more valuable and find ready sale at good prices.

THE OCCIDENT STAKE FOR 1904 will close, for foals of this year on the first of next month. The sum of ten dollars must accompany the nomination. The entire entrance fee is $100. The Occident Stake is always the largest stake of the year for trotters on the Pacific Coast, and the winner earns more money than he can win west of the Mississippi in any one event. Italia, the bay filly by Zombro 2:11, won the stake this year and placed $1536.50 to her credit. Last year the McKinney filly Eula Mac was the winner and her owners received $1231 for her performance. In 1899, Lena A., a daughter of Lynmont, won the stake. The sum of $1825 was credited to her for that race. It will be seen that the Occident Stake is worth winning and the winner is placed by it alone among the best winners of the year in California. It should be the aim of every breeder who expects to breed and develop a fast horse, to win stakes with his colts. Nothing adds more to the reputation of a stallion or a farm than to have their produce well up among the big money earners of the year. They can earn more in one stake than in half a dozen ordinary races, but unless they are entered they can never win. The Occident Stake of 1904 closes on the first of January next. It will be the richest of all the Occident Stakes. Send the name of your colt or filly foaled this year and the $10 to Secretary Geo. Jackson at Sacramento in time.

THE CLOSING OUT SALE of all the Vendome Stock Farm trotting stock has been postponed to next Saturday, December 21st. It is a collection of grandly bred roadsters, promising young trotters and famous broodmares in foal to McKinney 2:11 and Iran Alto 2:12. The latter sired Thomas R. 2:15, the champion four year old trotting gelding of 1901, and as everyone of his progeny besides this game gelding has shown speed and gameness and all the qualities which horse admirers are seeking, there is no reason why there will not be many stake winners disposed of at this sale. Among the mares are Lynda Oak 2:18 (dam of Dr. Frasse 2:12), Vendome 2:21 and Dr. Frasse's sister 2:25½ by Guy Wilkes 2:15½, Ydrel (dam of

Thomas R. 2:15 and Lynda Oak 2:18½ by Nutwood; Twenty-third by Director 2:17 out of Nettie Nutwood (dam of Hillsdale 2:15); Dr. Frasse's Sister, Mascot (sister to Dr. Frasse 2:12½), Bonnie Boodle, Progressive, Myrtledale, Alice Jordan, Fredericka (sister to Fredricksburg 2:12), Nettie Nutwood, etc.

This is a royal collection, while among the young trotters are horses by Boodle 2:12½, Antinous 2:28½ and Iran Alto. A number of these are heavily entered in the principal California and Eastern Futurity stakes and all payments are paid up to date. The catalogues have been issued and as the sale is to be held at the Occidental Horse Exchange and Wm. G. Layng, the popular live stock auctioneer, is to sell them, this will be one of the most eventful sales of the season. It is the first closing out sale of trotting stock that has been held in this city for years and as the demand for choice trotting stock has increased marvelously and is sure to continue, this is an opportunity not to be overlooked. One of these broodmares on a farm may bring in an annual revenue to the owner far beyond what the mare will cost at this sale.

"COMPARISONS ARE ODIUS" in many instances, but much depends upon the point of view. In the Holiday edition of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN we will present two tables of money winners that can be studied with profit by every horseman in California who contemplates racing over on the other side of the Rocky mountains next year. Few of those who train horses here are ready to tempt fortune on the Grand Circuit, as all know that the very best do not always win there. But there has been much talk lately of racing in the Mississippi valley, and that those who imagine that the Great Western Circuit presents advantages far and away ahead of anything that can be offered at home, we will publish in our holiday issue tables of the California and the Great Western Circuit side by side. All horses that won $100 or over last year will be in these tables and while the California circuit was the poorest held in years, the figures will show that it is not so far behind the circuits over east after all. But eleven harness horses won $1000 or over in California last year. This is a very poor showing and is fully accounted for by the limited amount of racing held here. On the Great Western Circuit, however, but thirteen horses won that amount, and when it is stated that the circuit named comprised the meetings at Pekin, Minneapolis, two at Davenport, and one each at Dos Moines, Joliet, Freeport, Galesburg, Columbus Junction, Hamline, Wilwaukee, Indianapolis, Evansville and Springfield, a total of fourteen weeks, the winnings of the horses that raced in California do not appear so meagre after all. Next season we hope to return to the old custom of having fairs in nearly all the districts, and those who train and race here at home will stand a much better chance to quit the season ahead of the game than those who journey to foreign parts, lured by the enchanted view which appears to those who look from a distance.

THE OUTLOOK for trotting horse breeders in the United States was never brighter than at the present time. The auction rings all show the market to be good with an upward tendency, the opportunities to earn money in races were never so numerous or purses so large, while there are more wealthy men ready to pay large prices for choice roadsters than ever before known. It is true that there has been no trotting bred horse sold for as much as Arion brought nine years ago, but neither has a two year old been bred that could accomplish what he did, and until one is bred and trots as fast no one can truthfully say that $125,000 will never again be paid for a champion stallion. During the year just about to close many hundreds of thousands of dollars have been invested in building new tracks and training grounds for trotters and placing old ones in repair, while the amount invested in breeding and raising stock will run well up into the millions. Many of the wealthiest men in America are becoming trotting horse enthusiasts and the desire to breed and own the two-minute horse has again taken possession of thousands. The many rich stakes now offered for colt trotters and pacers, and also for aged horses of all classes have made it possible for a breeder who is lucky enough to win one or two of them to secure a small fortune, an amount sufficient to keep the average person in comfortable circumstances the remainder of his life. The prospects are that the earning capacity of trotting and pacing horses will increase annually for many years to come, and that the American sport of road driving and matinee racing are as yet only in their infancy. There will be much breeding done next year—more than for several years past. Let us hope that it will be done with a fixed purpose in view, that the best mares will be mated with none but the best stallions, and that in the rush for speed, good looks and sound constitutions are not overlooked. There will be success in breeding good horses, and nothing but failure for those who breed the poor ones.

THE STALLION DIRECTORY of horses that will stand for public service in California next season will fill nearly two pages and doubtless prove one of the most interesting features in our holiday edition which will be out next Saturday. Breeders will find it a most valuable guide and every stallion owner should make it a point to have his horse included in the list. The ads cost but $3 each, a mere trifle and only a small percentage of the service fee of any horse, no matter how low the figure. No ads for this department can be received after Wednesday next, December 18th.

THE HORSEMAN for Christmas is a magnificent number. The cover, lithographed in colors, is a gem, while the illustrations all through are in the very highest style of the engraver's art. The picture of Creceus is undoubtedly the best and most perfect that has yet appeared of the champion and is suitable for framing. There are pages of tables and statistics relating to the harness horse and many special articles of great value. Everyone who is interested in harness horse affairs should secure a copy of the Christmas Horseman of 1901.

Showing Speed at Sales.

The recent ten days' sale in New York, at which in the neighborhood of 1000 standard bred horses were disposed of, clearly demonstrated that the business is on a very solid footing, says Palmer Clark. Never before in the history of the business have two such large and high-class consignments as that of the Bitter Root stock farm, owned by the late Marcus Daly, and that from Glen Falls, N. Y., established by the late W. S. Speir, been disposed of in one sale, to say nothing of other choice consignments. It proves there are always many ready to commence where the successful farms, for one reason or another, are forced to leave off. It also proves that the auction sale business is fast growing to be the most satisfactory way to sell good horses of all classes. In the estimation of close students of the game, New York and Chicago, the two leading centers for these auction sales, each has certain advantages over the other. New York has more wealthy men in attendance, who are buyers of what one might call high-priced celebrities, and it is a better place to sell a horse that cannot show to advantage, because there are not the most favorable opportunities for showing one. On the other hand, Chicago has the best accommodations at the least expense, and the best place in the world to show speed, and the buyers are growing more critical with experience, and pay only for what they can see.

I don't think there was a speed prospect sold at New York but what would have brought more money at any place where there was a straight-away track, where speed and manners could be shown in safety, and justice to both buyer and seller. I have always contended a good horse properly advertised would draw more buyers to any place where they could see the speed, and sell for more money, than at a private sale. Beyond this the things most to be considered is the reputation of the auction firm for fair dealing, the accommodations and cost of same, and the increased chances for accidents from lack of proper stabling in the sale building, shipping facilities, etc. Geographically, Chicago outclasses all other cities as a sale point, and the Union Stock Yards company have provided facilities beyond anything to be found, or that can be produced, at any point in America, and in my judgment it is only a question of time and management until it is the greatest distributing point between the east, west, north and south, for high class horses of all kinds, as it is now recognized to be for the work and ordinary class of horses.

E. C. Walker (Veritas), writing in The Trotter and Pacer, says: "The breeders' part of the 'Old Glory' sale was a repetition of the boom days when P. C. Kellogg sold the California consignments of Palo Alto, San Mateo, San Gabriel and the Hobart estate, and wound up such breeding establishments as Highlawn Farm, the home of Alcantara and Alcyone. The boom sales of the past week, from a breeder's standpoint, were in the main confined to the studs left by the departed breeders, Marcus Daly and William E. Spier. Buyers knew there was no culling and reserve of the best from these studs. When some enterprising trotting horse breeder adopts the policy of making engagements in the big stakes for all the foals of his farm, and consigns them, untried and unbroken, as yearlings and yearlings to the combination sales, he is likely to realize Daly prices, provided his stallions and brood mares are of that class and that some of the elder brothers and sisters of the offerings have shown stake winning form.

SULKY NOTES.

Our Holiday number will be out next week.

Napa is to have a Driving Club in the near future.

Vendome Stock Farm's sale will take place Saturday next.

About two hundred horses were at the Los Angeles track this week.

Look for the table of California money winners in our Holiday issue.

Cricket 2:10 by Steinway is the fastest mare that made a record to a high wheel sulky.

Milo M. Potter's great string of horses will be sold at auction at Los Angeles on Thursday next.

Send in your name to Secretary Kelley if you want to secure a nomination in the Breeders Futurity.

Cresceus stepped a quarter in 29½ seconds in his work at Los Angeles last Tuesday, and a full mile in 2:13.

Tropic 2:12½, pacing, is a new representative for Sultan, although he already had a trotting record of 2:24½.

William Harold 2:13½, the sire of Janice 2:08½, will make the season of 1902 at the Meek Farm, Haywards, at $40.

Directum 2:05½ will be in the stud during the season of 1902 at the International Stock Food Farm at Minneapolis.

About 100 head of ponies and as many dogs belonging to Norris Bros. show are wintering at the San Jose track.

Ukiah's fair having been a complete success this year, the directors hope to make the fair of 1902 still more profitable.

The Overland Racing Association of Denver has claimed the dates from June 21st to July 5th for its meeting next year.

A. W. Shippee will probably send a string of roadsters and prospective race trotters to Pleasanton to be trained this winter.

Get a good prospect for the racing season of 1902 at the Vendome Stock Farm sale in this city next Saturday, December 21st.

When a yearling trotter sold for $10,300 in the sale ring at New York, the "horseless age" talkers received a facer for sure.

One of the handsomest pictures ever made will adorn one of the pages of our holiday issue. It is of the great trotter Zomhro 2:11.

P. J. Thompson, of Watsonville, owns a full brother to the Boodle horse Valentine 2:30, that sold for $2500 at New York the other day.

J. B. Iverson, of Salinas, has lately received a certificate of the registration of his filly Amy I. by Diahlo 2:09½, dam Amy Fay by Anteeo.

Altogether 932 horses of the 995 catalogued were sold at the Old Glory sale in New York. They brought $495,440, an average of $531.40 each.

Ellert 2:11, full brother to Stamboulette 2:10½, brought $825 at the New York sale. M. L. Hayman, of New York City, bought the gelding.

Woodstock 2:17½ by Robert McGregor, dam Kitty Onward by Onward, died recently. He was twelve years old and a magnificent individual.

Hollister and Salinas will both give good meetings next year. The colt stakes inaugurated recently by those associations are attracting great interest.

Much Better 2:07½ has a slashing looking colt by Boodle 2:12½ that is just being weaned, and is in foal to Iran Alto 2:12½. Much Better will be bred again and then raced.

Pleasanton race track is the place for winter training. The heaviest rain storms only make the track better, and six hours of sunshine will make it ready to work fast miles on.

There will be another sale of trotting and pacing horses in New York at the end of February which will last five or six days. Gen. Tracy will sell all his horses including the stallion Advertiser.

Too Soon 2:24½, the nine year old black stallion by Direct 2:05½ out of Midget by Inca, went through the New York sale and went to the bid of $175 made by A. E. Thompson, of New York City.

W. H. Graham of Napa sold a six year old mare by Geo. Washington 2:16½ to a San Francisco gentleman the other day for $700. The mare is a big handsome bay, and can show a 2:20 gait on the road.

Twenty-seven young trotters by Directum 2:05½ brought $20,170 at the New York sale, an average of $747 her head. This crop of colts brought the Spier estate the price Mr. Spier paid for the horse.

All the horses on the Vendome Farm, except Iran Alto 2:12½, Much Better 2:07½ and a young broodmare, will be sold at auction on Friday, December 20th, by William G. Layng, the live stock auctioneer.

A meeting of the Pacific District Board of Appeals of the National Trotting Association has been called for Friday, December 27th, at 2 P. M., at the office of the Secretary, 36 Geary street, San Francisco.

Photo-engravings of the three stallions recently brought to California from the East, will appear in our holiday issue. They are Alcyo 2:10, Pistol 2:8¾ and Barondale 2:11½.

The champion Percheron stallion at the recent international live stock show at Chicago was Poirquoi Pas, an imported French horse. He was purchased during the show by Mr. Frank Fowler of Chicago for $3500.

Lynda Oak, one of the greatest broodmares in California will be sold at the Vendome sale. She is the dam of three in the list—Dr. Frasse 2:12½, Dr. Frasse's Sister 2:25½ and Vendome 2:21½. Lynda Oak is a young mare yet.

When an owner of a $500 horse wants $1000 for the animal and meets a man who wants to get a $500 horse for $100, it is very difficult for them to trade. Yet men of this sort meet every day and each thinks the other unreasonable.

John Madden, who bought quite a number of horses at the New York sale, sold them all within a few days, with the exception of Adhell, and made a clear profit of $2600. He could have sold Adhell at a profit of three thousand dollars.

The Chillicothe, Ohio, track has been plowed up and will be planted to onions. This is the track whereon old Flying Jih paced, to a world's record of 1:58½, hitched with a running mate. Probably the clouds of the soil will weep for the hygone days without the aid of the "ingins."

The California Stallion Directory, which will appear in our holiday issue next week, will be a guide to all breeders in this State. It already contains the names of nearly fifty stallions, and owners who want to keep up with the procession should see that their horses are not omitted from the list.

Jas. F. Dunne, of Hollister, is the owner of a colt that is considered a good prospect for the Salinas and Hollister three year old stakes next year. It is by Benton Boy, and its dam is the mare Letter B. 2:17½ by Ward B. that was prominent on the California circuit a few years ago and took her record at Stockton in 1896.

Arthur Brown, the lessee of the Napa track, spent a week in San Francisco recently and brought his handsome pair of blacks down with him to drive on the park roads here. He did not find anything that could pass him, and returned home thinking he has a pretty good span. One is by Lord Clive and the other by Seymour Wilkes 2:08½.

Counting Sweet Marie's matinee mark of 2:13½ as a record, McKinney 2:11½ has more new 2:15 performers this year than any other stallion. They are Charley Mac 2:11½, El Milagro 2:14½, Sola 2:14½ and Sweet Marie 2:13½. As Sweet Marie won two heats in one matinee race in 2:14 flat, in the presence of two thousand people, there will be no question about her having trotted that fast.

Ed Bell, Secretary of the Napa Agricultural Society, was in town this week. He says that Napa will give the best meeting ever held in that county next year and hope to get the dates of August 13th to 18th for its fair. Mr. Bell, with commendable energy, is working to have a meeting of district Secretaries called for about January 10th to agree upon and announce dates for the fairs of 1902.

Welcome 2:10½ is often spoken of as the handsomest horse in the State. He will be in the stud at the Meek Farm, Haywards, next year at $25. A report comes from Nevada that another of the produce of Lettie, dam of Welcome, entered the standard list on one of the Nevada tracks this year. If this report is correct Lettie is now the dam of four standard performers, two of which are in the 2:15 list.

Barney Simpson, the well known trainer at the Meek Farm, Haywards, left the other day for a visit to "the old folks at home" in Canada, and will spend his Christmas there racing around the stoves and old-fashioned fire places. Barney has been in California for more than twenty-five years, during which time he has never returned to the scene of his boyhood days. May he find the turkey and mince pies as toothsome and luscious as they were when he was a kid in Canada.

Secretary A. B. McKenzie of the Contra Costa Agricultural Association was a caller at the office of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN this week. Mr. McKenzie tells us that after three years of effort the Contra Costa association got out of debt this year and has a balance of $200 left in the treasury. It proposes to give a fair and race meeting next year that will eclipse all former efforts and instead of making $300 the largest purse will very likely give a couple of purses or stakes of five or six hundred dollars each for green trotters and green pacers.

The well known trainer, W. L. Snow, of Hornellsville, New York, called at the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN office last Tuesday. Mr. Snow spent several days in Los Angeles before coming to San Francisco and will return in time for the sale of Milo M. Potter's horses next week. He thinks very highly of several in the Potter string, particularly the McKinney mare Sweet Marie, matinee record 2:13½. Mr. Snow drove her a couple of miles one day last week and thinks she is a great prospect. He will not leave California until after the new year opens.

There is a new place for those who drive to the park or ocean beach to stop on the way out. The Sawyer House Bar, on the corner of Devisadero and Fulton streets, has been newly fitted up and opened by that well known and popular horseman, Dan Lieginger, who has recently disposed of his interest in the Dexter Prince stables. Dan has stocked the "Bar" with the very best of wines and liquors, and those who drive to the park or beach will find it a most convenient and pleasant place to pull up for a few minutes. He intends making it headquarters for horsemen, and will have the latest horse news on tap all the time.

Strange how men will stand by at a sale and see horses sold for a low price and then pay a much higher figure for them. A few minutes after the representative of the International Stock Farm secured Directum 2:05½ for $12,100, he was offered $25,000 for the champion, which offer was declined.

The veteran trainer George J. Fuller, has just returned from Russia, where he filled a three years' engagement at a salary of $6,000 a year, teaching the young Russians how to train and drive trotters. "Uncle George" owns jointly with his sons, Charley and Frank, a fine farm near Nashville, Tenn., where he will now make his home.

Tom James of Des Moines, Iowa, who will soon be in California with his horse Barondale 2:11½, has sold to Dr. W. A. Hecht of Maquoketa, Iowa, the brood mare Dictora Wilkes, dam of Baronoid 2:24½, by Dictator, second dam Miss Patchen, dam of Jan Vedder 2:27½, by Mambrino Patchen, third dam Kate Messenger, dam of Wildwood 2:30, by Alaric Almont, etc. Dictora Wilkes is in foal by Barondale.

The stockholders of the New England Trotting Horse Breeders Association held their annual meeting last week and listened to the treasurer's report, which showed a net profit of $17,000 on the year's business. The Grand Circuit meeting earned $21,334, the July meeting $2359 and the one in September $2388. Stall rent and incidentals brought the gross receipts up to $28,000. The $11,000 balance was used up in salaries, interest on the mortgage and in permanent improvements. At the three meetings there was distributed $116,200 in purse money, placing the association far and away head of any other light harness racing body in the country.

An excellent arrangement for the main or central circuit in California next year would be to open it at Petaluma and move thence to Santa Rosa, Napa, Vallejo and Woodland, in the order given, the last named meeting being held during the last week in August and just prior to the State Fair. Stockton could then follow in its regular place on the circuit, and other associations arrange dates as best suited their convenience. A circuit as suggested could be easily arranged at a meeting of secretaries and representatives of the associations named above and a meeting will very likely be called to meet in January with that object in view.

Lynda Oak 2:18½, one of the mares to be sold at the Vendome Stock Farm dispersal sale next Friday, December 20th, is one of the great broodmares of California. Lynda Oak was foaled in 1890, consequently is but eleven years old, but she is already the dam of three standard performers—Dr. Frasse 2:12½, Dr. Frasse's Sister 2:25½ and Vendome 2:21½. Lynda Oak is by Guy Wilkes 2:15½ and her dam is Ydrel, herself a great broodmare by the immortal Nutwood. Ydrel produced besides Lynda Oak, that good four year old, Thomas R. 2:15, one of the best race horses of this year, and we believe the fastest four year old gelding of 1901. Lynda Oak and Ydrel should bring good prices at the Vendome sale.

Mr. Albert Joseph, the attorney, of this city, who has owned quite a number of harness horses in his time, but never had the good fortune to race one that proved a crackerjack, has one now that bears every mark of a record smasher. This is a chestnut pacing mare that was bred by the late L. U. Shippee. She is by the well bred stallion Dictator Wilkes, a son of Dictator that is out of Manola by Geo. Wilkes, second dam Lizzie Brinker, the famous broodmare, dam of three in the list, of three producing sons, and grandam of eight or ten. The dam of this mare is by Hawthorne, second dam by Hambletonian 725. Mr. Joseph has never raced his mare, but uses her on the road and believes she has more speed than any pacer he ever saw. He races other horses that can pace quarters in 30 seconds, but this mare goes by them in a rush in a manner that leads one to believe she is in a class by herself. She has elegant road manners and a particularly racy conformation. It is to be hoped she may be seen on the circuit next year.

The Home of the Wild Goose.

By those who do not know him the wild goose is often considered a simpleton, a slow flyer and easy to kill. But next to the wild turkey and the sand hill crane there is no bird so hard to capture by any fair means of hunting, according to that pleasing writer and eminent authority on California wild game, Thomas S. Van Dyke, none that can shed more shot, and few much better game when haggled than a fat goose.

This coast seems the chosen home of the goose family, and California is the favorite winter resort of the tourists of that blood, as it is of all sensible tourists generally. It is but a few years since they thronged the lagoons in untold numbers and dotted the rolling green of the grassy plains and slopes like bands of sheep. Even yet mounted men are necessary in places to keep them from destroying the springing grain and on many of the larger lakes and ponds they still spend the warm hours of the day in great numbers.

March is about the best time of the winter to find them in the finest condition, but no matter what the time or how great their numbers they are so wary that one must be fully up to date to avoid their keen eyes.

They used to make grand moonlight shooting in many places, and still do in some; but there are now few places where one can depend upon anything but deep pits in the ground, in which one may be wholly out of sight. When these are located on a line of flight and surrounded with decoys, which are generally made of sheet iron, though there is nothing like a tame wild goose, one can have grand shooting during the hours of flight. One who knows how to call geese, and when to keep still, will now have a great advantage over one who does not, but good sport may still be had without calling.

About 10 o'clock in the morning geese start for water, and for an hour or more flock after flock rises above the horizon line and comes in clamorous ranks toward some favorite pond. The deep-toned, silvery honk of the Canada goose, the largest of the tripe, plays bass to the cackling treble of the white-fronted goose, commonly called brant. The snow goose, commonly called white brant, sings a strange tenor that makes the whole music intensely wild and penetrating. With a box sunk in the pond, or a floating hatery in which one may lie even with the water, and entirely out of sight, one may have even better shooting than on a flyway.

There is no parade of the bird family equal to this coming into the ponds when geese are very plenty. The only thing approaching it is the circling of the sandhill cranes high in the dome of heaven during the middle of the day. The Canada goose announces his coming from afar, and bears down upon you in long lines and wedge-shaped masses, sometimes in winding strings, slowly settling from on high, often in converging lines slowly lowering from afar toward the edge of the water. Nearing its surface they glide softly along many yards, but a few feet, or even inches, above it, and settle into it with a gentle splash quite surprising for such heavy birds.

The white fronted goose comes heralded by clamorous cackle, but keeps high in the air until over the pond. Every throat is hushed for a moment, then all open again and the birds begin to tumble, pitch, whirl and gyrate, each on a different line and each in its own way, down a thousand feet or more to the surface of the water, when, with wondrous precision, they catch themselves and fall in rank like the best drilled soldiers, ceasing their clamorous music, slide along the water a few rods and settle into it as gently and silently as so many snowflakes.

The snow goose comes with even more obstreperous throat, but as the flock nears the edge of the pond the ranks change to almost a perpendicular column, each bird with wings set forward and downward, with body half erect, and downward floats the whole column as softly as so many bits of down.

There is so much else to shoot in California that the goose is hardly appreciated as he will be in time, but in the East there are few sportsmen who do not consider him among the finest of the game birds, well worthy of all the time, patience and care it takes to get within reach, even with the most killing of modern guns.

Jackson's Napa Soda untangles the feet!

CARTRIDGE AND SHELL.

On Tuesday last the trial of George Franzen in Oakland, for trespassing on the Willow Lodge preserve, resulted in a dismissal after the case had been all day on trial before a jury.

Quail hunting has been excellent in many nearby locations for a week. One of the best day's sport reported for last Sunday was had by C. A. Haight, Dave Thom and W. J. Golcher on a favorite ground in the vicinity of Livermore.

The cold wave on Wednesday and Thursday should have developed many a snipe patch. Coming in the middle of the week as it did, we heard a number of good fellows sigh regrets at the lack of opportunity to take advantage of the snipe shooting weather conditions.

Al Wilson and F. W. McLennan shot several black brant in Tomales bay last Sunday. These birds are now beginning to make their winter visit to this feeding ground. A deal of skill and a powerful killing gun are two of the necessary requisites for haggling these wary sable visitors from Arctic latitudes.

At a meeting of the Empire Gun Club held last week the following members were elected to serve as officers for the coming year: James P. Sweeney, President; W. O. Cullen, Vice-President; J. B. Hauer, Secretary-Treasurer; J. Peltier, Manager; J. H. Durst, Captain; A. J. Webb, Lieutenant-Captain, and C. A. Bennett, Sergeant-at-Arms.

The reclaimed marsh lands near Sears Point and Reclamation station are weekly the resort of a number of hunters and their dogs, and also of the leashmen and their greyhounds. Jack rabbits are plentiful and easy to get. We saw one bunch of several dozen "Jacks" on the Tiburon boat last Sunday. These rabbits had been shot by a party composed of five hunters and a number of half-bred setters and retrievers. As a table quantity the hares are not up to the standard. Many of them are infected with parasites that spoil the meat for food purposes. The sport of hunting the lopers is an exhilarating one, however.

Eastern authorities claim it is only a question of time before the ruffed grouse will be a rare bird in a sportsman's gamebag. This bird doesn't like civilization; he shuns it, and only haunts the edges of old clearings when he feels satisfied that human beings have long since ceased to cultivate them. Ruffed grouse must be sought in wild and rocky, well-wooded mountains; places where it requires activity and endurance to accomplish anything, and where a man has to be quick of hand and keen of eye to hag the hurtling ball of brown feathers, that jumps from under a rock and whirls up the hill, putting a tree or rock between it and the shooter in the twinkling of an eye.

This week of dry weather should have very much improved the shooting conditions on the Suisun marshes. This district for a week past has been the resort of many spoonbill ducks.

Canvasback ducks are both numerous and found in almost all of the bay county marshes. Some splendid bags of "cans" have recently been made at Sears Point, also on the Petaluma and Sonoma marshes.

Mallard ducks are plentiful in the San Joaquin tules in the vicinity of Jersey Landing.

Two pair of the best looking mallard ducks we have seen for several seasons were received this week by J. J. Sweeney. The ducks were shot by Barney Devlin of Benicia.

The degeneration of antlers on Scottish moors has been a fruitful topic of discussion in the columns of the London Field, the leading English sportsmen's paper, year after year. The general conclusion came to by the majority of those who have taken part in this discussion seems to be that the quality and quantity of food has a great deal to do with the size of the antlers. Another contention was that the pursuit and killing of all the stags with big spreads of antlers had a bad effect on the size of antlers of future deer, as it robbed the "deer forests" of the best and strongest deer—of the deer, in fact, best calculated to act as sires for future stags. Both of these sides to the question had many followers, and it looks as if the point was not yet settled. It may be that a similar discussion will arise in our country, the deterioration in the size of antlers on moose and elk giving cause for the same. It would seem natural that the systematic pursuit of bull moose and elk with fine spreads of antlers should have some effect upon the size of the antlers of the deer that are to come after.

There is always great difficulty in getting accurate information from either an angler or a hunter, who has just made a successful trip, as to where he has been. It is quite natural that with game shooting districts and good fishing localities few are far between, those who have been lucky enough to find out such spots should wish to keep them to themselves for their own use and behoof. Wise men, therefore, do not question an angler or a hunter too closely; they also take with a grain of salt all information gratuitously furnished by such parties. "Out in San Mateo," or "away up the river" is about as near as one can generally get at it, and no one looks upon the party dealing in such generalities as other than a man who knows what he is about. This state of affairs is brought about by the pot-hunting methods of many people, who go out on a hunting or a fishing trip with the sole idea of bagging as much game or as many fish as possible in a given time, thereby ruining a locality that might with careful handling have afforded ample sport for many years.

The number of hunting casualties so far this season has not been a small one. Quite a few fatal cases have been chronicled as well as happenings of minor seriousness. Careless gunners are a menace not only to themselves but to everybody else who happens to be in the same neck of the woods with them. They blaze away at anything and at everything, without the slightest thought as to the possibility of some human being happening to be within their line of fire. It has been suggested that it would be a good thing to make it criminal negligence for a man to fire at a moving object, the exact nature of which he was uncertain about or in the direction of another shooter. Where a man destroys life, or maims another, by reason of careless work with a gun, there is certainly something of criminal negligence about the act. It was an accident, however, and one generally feels that the regrets that follow such an act of carelessness are in themselves somewhat in the nature of a punishment. Still, if something could be done to stop the carrying of dangerous weapons by people ill fitted by experience to have the same in possession a move would have been made in the right direction and the annual death roll from gun accidents would be materially decreased.

Guns for use at the traps and guns for use in the field are two different articles altogether. Unless a man wants to use his field gun on ducks, a light 12-gauge, with a weight of about 6½ pounds, with 26 or 28 inch barrels, the right barrel a pure cylinder and the left barrel a modified choke, is about the proper caper. This gun will do all that should be done on grouse, quail, snipe or rabbits, a suitable load being from 2½ to 3 drachms of any of the standard smokeless gun-powders. With the smaller loads of powder an ounce of shot is ample, while on no occasion should such a gun be made to carry more than 1½ ounces of shot. The days have gone by when men carried all day, up and down hill, 10-gauge guns weighing nine or ten pounds. For ducks a hard-shooting, heavy 12-gauge is just the weapon, although some people still stick to 10 gauges and "old black powder." A 12-hore gun, weighing 7½ pounds, such as is made for and used at pigeons when trap-shooting, is a suitable gun for duck, brant or other geese. The modern 12-gauge is a powerful weapon, and is fully equal to the old-time 10-gauges, without which no man was considered to be fixed up for ducks. Such a gun will handle without any trouble a shell containing 3½ to 3¾ drachms of powder and 1½ ounces of large sized shot. For black sea brant our shooters prefer the heavy 10-gauge, loaded with 50 or 52 grains of bulk smokeless powder and 1½ oz. of No. 4 or 3 shot.

TRADE NOTES.

One hundred years is a long period for a firm to continue in business, in fact, such a commercial condition is so infrequent, that it is well worthy of mention and recognition.

In commemoration of a successful manufacturing career since 1802, a calendar will be issued next month by the Du Pont Powder Company, that will be illustrative of a century passed by this well known and leading powder making corporation in an application to and building up of an immense industry second to none in its line in the world. A history of this gigantic concern would be inadequately given in the limited space afforded by our columns. Since the first output of powder in 1802, the Du Pont military and sporting powders have been in increasing demand by reason of sterling worth and merit. From time to time as the occasion required, and keeping pace with the scientific advances of the day, the quality of the goods have been improved and Du Pont powder has held an honored position in the ranks of materials that have been potent factors not only in making history but also were an important agent in the economics of modern civilization, its needs and incidentally its recreations.

Prior to the introduction of the smokeless powders, a brand of black powder known as Eagle Duck was the popular powder for sportsmen. The United States Government tests proved it to be the very best powder made and from this standard all other powders were judged. At this day much—far more than is ordinarily thought—black powder is used. For the coast climate a black powder, the "Summer" brand has long been the peer of all black powders.

The superior merits of the black powders have been corollatively produced in the different brands of smokeless powders—these goods, both for trap and field work have passed triumphantly through the severest tests, and while there are other good and effective smokeless powders, the Du Pont shotgun and rifle powder seem to have a large and ardent following who use the powder of this make preferably and persistently.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Dec. 6, 1901.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN—Dear Sir: You will note that the American E. C. and Schultze Gunpowder Co., have recently put upon the market two new powders, namely the New E. C. and the New Schultze. They have ceased making the old E. C. and the old Schultze.

The writer asked the Selby Smelting & Lead Co., of this city, to test shells of their own loading, with these powders, and we received a few days ago, the following letter from them:

"Dear Sirs: We have tested six shells each of the following loads, in the New Schultze and New E. C. Powder, with the results given below:

		Velocity	Breech Pressure
New E. C.	36 grs., 1 oz. No. 7 shot...	1187 ft per second	7033
New Schultze,	36 grs., 1 oz. No. 7 shot...	1162 ft per second	7268
New E. C.	39 grs., 1½ oz. No. 7 shot...	1142 ft per second	8030
New Schultze,	39 grs., 1½ oz. No. 7 shot...	1131 ft per second	7289

These tests to our idea, were very good ones. Any load that will show a velocity of over 1100 feet per second, with a breech pressure of less than 10,000 pounds, is certainly a good load. The variation on this test, was 44 feet between the six shots.

It may not be amiss to state in this connection, that the manufacturers of these powders, the American E. C. & Schultze Gunpowder Co., make the following claims for their New E. C. powder. They claim that it is absolutely smokeless, quick in action, gives a regular and even pattern with high velocity, and has less recoil than any other powder of equal strength. It leaves no residuum in the barrels, and it will not deteriorate with age. The grains are hard and indestructible and ordinary variations in the pressure put upon the powder when loading it, do not materially influence the shooting qualities. The New E. C. can be used alike in light or heavy loads. It weighs 12 grains to a dram by measure, and it will give good results in either cheap or high grade shells. It is a hulk powder and can be loaded by measure. The average loads for a 12 gauge gun are 2½ to 2¾ drams, or 33 to 44 grains avoirdupois weight.

In reference to the New Schultze gunpowder, they claim that this powder is hard grained, smokeless and waterproof. It does not leave a residuum. It is chemically pure, and will not pit the barrels of any gun, no matter if the load is left in the barrel for a week or a month. It will not deteriorate with age, and is not affected by atmospheric changes. This powder is exactly the same as the New E. C. as regards loading. A 12-gauge load is from 2½ to 2¾ drams by measure or 42 to 43 grains avoirdupois weight. They claim that the New E. C. and the New Schultze combine all of the advantages of the old hulk powders, and also all the advantages of the new condensed powders, without any of the disadvantages that belong to either of them. Yours respectfully,

PHIL B. BEKEART CO.

ROD.

The coast streams have been recently credited with a run of small steelhead. A party of city anglers were present at Point Reyes on Sunday and fished the tide-wrter with but indifferent success. John Gallagher, however, was known to have hooked several nice fish during the week. The steelhead and grilse are taken with bait only. Salmon roe is the favorite.

A letter received by John Butler from Captain G. Watson this week states that grilse are running in Russian river. The captain and another Russian river angler, McClure by name, each landed a three pound fish at the mouth of Austin creek on Sunday. There seems to be quite a run of fish, now, but nothing like the conditions ruling three years ago. If the weather remains fair the angler should have no trouble in fishing over the whole river.

The great charm of surf-casting is that one never knows what fish is coming along next, nor how big that fish may be. The ten or fifteen pound striped bass is a possibility, while one even larger is not improbable, whilst fishing on the ocean beaches of Marin county. Fish of two and three pounds weight have been caught in the surf near the mouth of Wilson creek. Once hooked, it is no easy matter to land a heavy fish in the surf, the task requiring great skill and patience, with a ready wit to seize upon each opportunity and to make the most of it. A few years ago the surf-casters were looked down upon; now they are respected, and their ranks are annually increased by large bodies of recruits. Surf fishing at Monterey bay, the Santa Barbara channel and at Redondo, Santa Monica, San Diego, etc., is a sport now popular and indulged in by large numbers of salt water anglers.

The man who fishes merely to catch fish, and it is a regrettable fact that there is such a person, generally uses the greatest number of hooks and lines or rods that he can look after. He is the man who goes into the fishing tackle stores hunting for the "most deadly" baits. He is the man who goes trolling with a gang of hooks that paralyzes the fish that seizes the bait, while the artificial frog that he casts for bass bristles with enough hooks to start a small tackle shop. A sportsman, the man who fishes for love of the sport, and to whom a large catch to take home is only a secondary matter, is usually satisfied with a single hook for each fly on his cast, or a single hook through the lips of the live frog he is using as a bait for bass. If a man cannot hook and land a black bass on a single hook, he should not be allowed to fish. It can be done, and he should be made to learn how to do it. One fish caught in this way is worth a dozen that have swallowed a gang of hooks, and which have thus been severely handicapped in their struggles to get away.

Fishing tackle manufacturers and dealers are always bringing out something new and pleasing to the angler's eye. In split bamboo rods the evolution from the beanpole of the country led to this specimen of the rodmaker's art is startling, and every season adds to the merit of these articles. And in artificial baits, the strides made by the manufacturers of this country, in devices for catching gudgeons and frightening other fish, have been many and marked. Formerly it was conceded that the only really reliable flies for trout and bass fishing came from Europe, and particularly from England. But now that reproach has been removed, and America can supply some splendid specimens of this kind. Among the latest are some artificial butterflies shown by a certain firm of dealers in sporting goods, which rival the real article for beauty of shape and coloring. These butterflies are "crushable," are not liable to be damaged by the fishes' teeth and are said to be sure "killers." Artificial minnows and frogs, and grasshoppers and bugs of all kinds, have long been before the angling public, but these butterflies are "heauts."

The devotees of striped bass angling find the sport somewhat uncertain again. That the fish are plentiful in the particular locations worked over by the trollers in boats, is proved by the fact that the net fishermen are frequently seen making hauls of fish on shore under the very eyes of the unsuccessful anglers. The market fishermen seem to be able to locate the fish readily; certain it is, that they know more about the habits of the bass than any of our local sportsmen, and further, they are determinedly reticent in divulging any information that would be of benefit to the angling fraternity.

But few boats were out last Saturday in the straits and along the Marin shores. Not more than half a dozen fish were caught. In one boat were A. M. Cumming and Senator McFarland. When off the south end of the Corte Madera marsh a strike was made on Cumming's rod while he was devoting his attention to something else. McFarland seized the rod and landed the fish, which weighed over six pounds.

Charles Miller and J. A. Pariser tried the sloughs near Burdell's on Sunday without catching any bass.

The general consensus of opinion among the salt water fishermen seems to be that the best time to catch bass is during the half hour before and after dead low water. The tides to-morrow are not favorable to this theory.

The advent and success of the Wilson spoon for striped bass fishing has taxed the ingenuity and inventive genius of several anglers in attempts to improve the Wilson device or design something more effective. The latest rival to the Wilson spoon has been designed by Charles Breidenstein. The spoon is practically a double Wilson spoon, having the appearance when seen in profile of being two flattened curves joined at the ends and with the concave and convex surfaces reversed. The swivel attachment is the usual one used for spoons; instead of a stalpe and ring for the hook, two hooks are attached to a ring in the opposite end. The device has merit for it has been successfully used for bass trolling. Breidenstein caught three fish, the largest a six pounder, on the initial trial of the spoon. The peculiar shape of the lure was designed to make it move in the water in a jerky, snappy way, from side to side, somewhat after the style of action of the small fish, the shoals of which seem to attract the attention of the feeding striped bass.

Why does a trout or a bass take a fly—that is, an artificial fly? Nine times out of ten the artificial bait does not resemble anything like an insect that might be expected to be found in the precincts of a lake or stream. Take the scarlet ibis, for instance, a fly built up of the most vivid scarlet feathers; it's not like anything in nature that the bass ever saw before, yet it makes a most killing fly when used as a dropper. The "backies," brown and red, as well as the black hackle, do look something like the great waterbugs that skip up and down the water; but still any bass with ordinary intelligence would only have to inspect it carefully to see that it was a base counterfeit. On the whole, we may take it that both bass and trout see something moving, and something that looks like a fly; it may be good to eat or it may not. Anyway it's worth the trial; if not approved of it can easily be spat out again. The inquisitive fish, however, reckoned without the hook. The curious object has a sting in it, and that sting won't let go. Wow!

It is a different thing when fishing with a frog or a minnow. The frog is cast to a point several yards from the boat, say, just to the edge of the weeds. It falls with a splash, thereby attracting the attention of a bass that may be lurking near by. He sees the frog in the water, and concludes hastily that it has just jumped in for his especial benefit. As he looks at it, the frog makes a spasmodic movement forward, the skillful angler giving the frog a lifelike movement by reeling in the line in jerks. It's a sure enough frog, and as such is good to eat from the bass's point of view. He investigates and annexes both frog and hook. Sometimes he gets away; more often he doesn't—unless he's "the big one." Bait casting is an art in itself, and it takes no small degree of skill to put the lure just where you want it. A weed patch here and a bunch of grass there cause lots of bother. It takes skill to avoid them, and even if you don't get "a run" or a "strike," it is no small pleasure to feel that at any rate you overcame the difficulties that surrounded your self-imposed task of placing the bait in such a ticklish locality.

The superb condition Lester C. showed in last week was due to the excellent work of Joe Kerr, who handled the dog.

Horseflesh for Dogs.

The idea prevails among the majority of kennel keepers that horseflesh is one of the mainstays in the canine dietary. It is well known among dog feeders that a raw meat diet does not induce to adiposity, in fact the contrary, but unless there is a sufficient amount of exercise to work off the highly concentrated food, trouble will ensue before long. In answers to queries and advice to novices so general in the columns of kennel papers one finds continually reference to horseflesh as a diet almost necessary to a dog's well being. A change to horseflesh is sometimes useful as a mere accessory to the general regimen, but we know of kennels which make a practice of feeding it continually as a cheap substitute for cattle and sheep meat. It would be well to use some discretion in future. Some very interesting experiments recently made by Professor Pflueger in Paris should make a pause on the horseflesh diet. Professor Pflueger asserts, in a work he has just brought out on the subject, that horseflesh is positively injurious to the man and beast who eats it. Zoological gardens and traveling menageries feed almost exclusively on raw horseflesh, and perhaps this is the reason very few animals in these concerns have a sleek, well-fed appearance.

During a whole month the Professor fed several dogs exclusively on horseflesh and found that, no matter how much food he gave them they became thinner every day. Furthermore, he discovered that all of them soon began to suffer from some gastric trouble. A similar experiment was then tried on a St. Bernard dog, and the result was that he lost much weight during a week that he was fed exclusively on horseflesh and regained it rapidly as soon as he was supplied with other food. On some days the horseflesh was cooked and on others uncooked, but the effect produced by it was always the same.

Professor Pflueger says that the reason why horseflesh is injurious is because it contains some poisonous substance the exact nature of which he has not as yet been able to ascertain. He thought at first that the reason was because there was very little fat on the flesh, and therefore on two or three days he mixed a considerable quantity of such fat, which he had carefully collected, with the dogs' rations. No beneficial result, however, was attained thereby, and, as the animals continued to lose flesh and to suffer internally he conceived the idea of mixing with the horseflesh some fat taken from the loins of sheep, cows and pigs. This was a happy thought. The dogs quickly began to recover their health and strength, and the Professor naturally concluded that these different kinds of fat which he had mixed with their food possessed the desired antitoxic properties.

His advice, then, to persons who like to eat horseflesh and who desire to feed their dogs on it is to mix with the flesh fat from the loins of sheep or cows in the proportion of twenty-five grammes of fat to every kilogramme of horseflesh. This plan, he claims, should be adopted in zoological gardens where many carnivorous animals are fed exclusively on horseflesh. He also says that horseflesh should be boiled in water and that the water should then be thrown away.—The American Stockkeeper.

DOINGS IN DOGDOM.

W. C. Ralston took a liking to the Setter, Bowling Green, and purchased him last week. The dog will be taken in hand by W. Courts and given a field training.

A bright, snappy, nicely marked Boston Terrier puppy, bred in Mrs. H. H. Carlton's kennels, is announced for sale in our kennel ads this week. The young "beanster" would come in apropos as a holiday present.

Mrs. Thos. E. Murphy, owner of the Gabilan Kennels, purchased two bitch Collie puppies at Oakland last week. One puppy is by Don Juan out of Lass O' Gowrie, owned by W. J. Oliver, of Oakland. The other was a Winters Collie Kennels breeding.

J. G. Morgan's Fox Terrier Champion Niola Daddy served Wallace Moore's sprightly bitch Vina Belle on the 12th inst. Daddy has a consistent record as a sire, some of his best ones are Champion Don Cesar, Adsum and Mediation. The type conformation of these two dogs, leads to the sanguine anticipation of a Fox Terrier "nick" that will produce a litter of good ones.

Scottie Boy, the lemon and white Pointer owned by George H. T. Jackson, has joined the canine majority. Scottie was a rollicking good pal and a staunch field dog. He was well known to most of our local sportsmen, for whom he always had a happy wag of the tail and a knowing expression in his eye which seemed to be a response in good-natured satisfaction to the hailing recognitions of the shooting fraternity.

A decidedly novel occupation which has of late been noticed in Baltimore is that of tattooing the names of their owners upon dogs. Several months ago there appeared a young man who is engaged in that pursuit, and during the time he remained there did a good business. Contrary to the belief of some, the animals apparently experienced very little pain. The operation lasts about fifteen minutes. The animal is usually held by two men, one having hold of the hind legs, while the other holds the front paws. With a set of very fine needles the operator then goes to work, deftly pricking the letters into the skin, just deep enough to draw a few drops of blood. Then he pours the India ink over the wounds, or rather scratches, and the operation is over. In a few weeks the sores are completely healed, and the animal bears during the remainder of its existence an unmistakable mark of identification.

With the recent purchase of Dottie and Lady Mask coupled with Legs and Feet and his Champion Niola Daddy, Mr. Morgan has now a kennel of Fox Terriers that will take a lot of beating to win from.

Gabilan Kennels' splendid young English Setter Danstone's Pride (Count Danstone-Fairland Queen) was the subject of much favorable comment at the Oakland show last week. Three services have already been registered for him. Oroville Kennels, Winters Collie Kennels and another owner have signified their intention of sending bitches to Hollister as soon as they are in season.

This dog arrived here from Indiana the Saturday before the show opened. On Sunday he was given a run in the hills near Hollister. He worked with a Pointer and Irish Setter, both broken to quail. He was full of ginger and vitality and worked out his field companions. He was broke in the East, but he performed so well on his first put down to California quail that his new owner is doubly pleased with him. He showed so much bird sense and style that it is possible he will be entered in the Pacific Coast field trials.

C. S. Moser, of Madera, recently purchased of Phil Wand two puppies, a dog and bitch. These puppies are cross bred, the sire being Major Hooper's Scotch Staghound Marco and the dam is Major Davis' (of Auburn) Foxhound Victress. This cross was made for the purpose of raising the dogs to run and kill coyotes. The youngsters lean to the Foxhound type, except in head, which favors the Staghound. Their coats are a rich cinnamon, and now at four months old they present a favorable appearance for the work in view. This cross for this particular work is a new one. A mating of this character being somewhat difficult to get here. It is assumed that the dogs when matured will have speed, nose, courage and fighting qualities that will be effective in making them valuable for the purpose of exterminating coyotes. The career of these two puppies will be watched with interest. The project of crossbreeding for a dog that will work on coyotes is not a new one here, but in most instances, while certain results were developed, an acceptable all round dog has not yet been bred.

The California Cocker Club held a meeting at the Oakland Show on last Saturday evening at 8:30 o'clock, President Ralston presiding. The following amendments were made to the by-laws:

Amendment No. 1, Article V. The dues shall be twenty-five cents (25c) a month, payable yearly in advance.

Amendment No. 2. Regarding the giving of Class prizes. Where class prizes are offered by the Club at any show, there shall be at least two dogs belonging to members of the Club in competition for said class prizes, or they will be withheld. Except in cases where a member's dog takes first prize in competition, in which case a prize will be awarded.

The following officers were elected to serve for the ensuing year: President, W. C. Ralston; Vice-president, John H. Dorian; Second Vice-president, James H. Jones; Secretary and Treasurer, E. C. Plume. Executive Committee, W. C. Ralston, J. H. Dorian, J. H. Jones, E. C. Plume, P. C. Meyer.

After other business of importance had been transacted, the meeting adjourned, subject to a call from the Executive Committee.

Oakland Show Notes.

The bench show across the bay last week will be remembered in the annals of Coast kennel affairs as the best small show held up to the present time. With but 125 dogs in, the quality in several breeds shown could not be heached much better anywhere in the United States.

The judging of Chas. R. Harker, Esq., of San Jose, was accepted for St. Bernards and Mastiffs by spectators and exhibitors with unanimous satisfaction.

Frank Hall, Esq., of this city, was equally correct and satisfactory with the Great Danes.

W. E. Chute, Esq., of San Francisco, went over the Deerhounds, Foxhounds, Pointers, Setters, etc., with good selection for an initial appearance in the ring.

Superintendent John Bradshaw distributed the ribbons for the Cocker classes with a precision and promptness that elicited much approbation from those present and interested.

L. A. Klein took all other breeds. His judging of the Fox Terriers particularly, was pleasing to the fanciers interested in that breed.

MASTIFFS—Two entries were bonched, neither one worthy of other mention than that they were big dogs.

ST. BERNARDS—Novice dogs, with Roxy Savage Taylor Jr. first and Commodore Schley second, were placed properly. Limit and open dogs brought out Lester C., possibly one of the largest St. Bernards in the United States. For a big dog he is surprisingly sound and symmetrical. This son of Alto Millo has a good head and body, stands well and has splendid action and gait, qualities rather unusual for so large a dog. He is strongly boned, and has unusually sound legs. Lo King, second in open and winners reserve, was in excellent condition, but could not stand off the superior points of his larger competitor. In bitches nothing worthy of extended mention was taken into the ring. Alta Rachel, looking better than when last shown, was easily placed first in bitches.

In smooth coat St. Bernards, General B., looking and showing better than we ever saw him, was placed over Fulvo of Hanenstein. Fulvo we fancy as the better type of dog, conforming more to the Swiss standard. He has a better head and expression, and is not behind the General in body or bone. Miss Barry, in good shape and fettle, is an excellent bitch.

GREAT DANES. Maud S., good in type and style, was the best of ten bonched and easily won the Hickman cup for best. Cunningham's Carlotta is a promising young harlequin that will develop with maturity. Blue Beard, winner in dogs, is a good one.

DEERHOUNDS. One specimen shown and but fair.

GREYHOUNDS. In this class four entries were shown. October Lad, the winner, is a clean built, stylish looking dog.

FOXHOUNDS. A dog and bitch, both good average specimens of the breed.

POINTERS. A small class, but good in quality. Lady Colvin, a staunch, racy looking bitch, won over Sister Glenbeigh G. Puny Gee, a daughter of Sister Glenbeigh, is an excellent looking bitch, but slightly light in head and bone. Lady Colvin won the special for best in the show.

ENGLISH SETTERS. A small class of good ones. In novice, Bowling Green was placed over the Count Danstone puppy, Danstone's Pride. We favored the latter dog, which is a stylish, racy looking field dog and decidedly better in body, legs and coat than Bowling Green. Buckwa, in fine condition was ahead in the Setter competition and easily won the first honors.

IRISH WATER SPANIELS were represented by one specimen, Dennis C. In type, style, conformation, coat and color he will rank over possibly any specimen of the breed in the United States.

FIELD SPANIELS. One entry, brought out Black Knight, an ordinary specimen but in nice condition.

COCKER SPANIELS. In this breed there was a good showing, fourteen blacks and ten reds. The average quality was good. Winners dogs in black easily went to Hampton Promise, who would have also won the special for best, but was harred from the race for the cup given by his owner. Promise is a compact, well boned and handy little dog with good coat, legs and feet and strong character. Glenwood Havoc is beginning to show age. In hitches the honors fell deservedly to Mona II, a sweet little specimen, good in body, head, legs and feet. Plumeria Cocker Kennels with numerous entries captured most of the prizes in the Cocker classes, Plumeria Portia, reserve in winners, will develop with age.

In reds Plumeria Fancy won out with Florodora a dangerously close second. Hampton Goldie won out in dogs and also took the special. He was shown in fine condition.

COLLIES—Honors went to Ormskirk Emerald, Jr., by right. He was in superb condition and looked as good as ever. Laddie, reserve, was in fine coat. He also won the special for best. In bitches Lady Battle, good headed, nicely formed and well coated, was at the head of the class. Collies as a class were excellent. The kennel prize went to O. J. Albee.

BULLDOGS—Woodlawn Masquerade, a promising youngster, had no competition. Ivel Rustic and Beaumaris Fortune, in for exhibition only, are well known and were in fine fettle.

BULL TERRIERS were few in numbers but of high class. Woodcote Wonder, in grand shape, led the procession seconded by Bayview Brigadier. Deek, a young dog, is evenly turned and a good one. American Belle and Newmarket Queen were properly one two in bitches.

BOSTON TERRIERS—Considerable speculation was rife over the respective merits of two of the three entries in this breed. Winner was fairly placed over Sir Montez in dogs. The award for special, the real bone of contention, also went to him over Endcliffe Lita. Winner is a sturdy, well balanced dog of strong typical characteristics. Lita was a close second by a shade, if not a mite stronger in the race. We fancy her head better than Winner's. If the award had gone the other way, it would not have been a bad ruling.

FOX TERRIERS were the best class lot in the show. Champion Niola Daddy, a bit overweight, showed class and style enough in the ring to prove himself easily the cleanest cut dog out here. He has a well proportioned head, strong body and clean cut limbs. Norfolk Billy, or Wande Jester as he is now called, is another newcomer. He is a sturdy looking dog, but has not the character or class one would expect from his Eastern record. Vibo was deservedly given reserve to Vibo. Norfolk Trueman was absent. Woodlawn Two Spot, first in puppies, is a dog that will bear watching; he has a front that will be hard to equal if he fulfills his present promising condition. In bitches Vina Belle and Carmencita were one, two, as they should have been. The kennel prize went to Wande Kennels for a more than excellent bench showing.

In wires Cairnsmuir General alone, won the honors. IRISH TERRIERS were represented by Mike, a rather decent Milesian. Barney F. showed his good disposition during exhibition only.

SCOTCH TERRIERS. Two entries from Victoria looked very good after the long trip. The hitch Scotch O' Brae was the best of the two. Fighting Mac is faulty in loins. Neither of them were more than ordinary.

MALTESE TERRIERS with three entries brought out two excellent ones, Toddes and Margie B. Good coats and condition were noticeable features of these two.

JAPANESE SPANIELS. Nippon, a good type and a proper sized and weighted dog, well marked, with a fine coat and chrysanthemum tail, easily won over two competitors, both coarse and large sized, one so much oversized as to be practically out of the class.

MISCELLANEOUS brought out a large grown and remarkably well developed black Greyhound entered as an Australian Wolfhound. As this breed is an unrecognized one, the dog was deservedly given a special on general merit.

BARKS.

Switzerland has public bathing pools for dogs.

Hound meal scalded is an excellent food for puppies.

A Boarhound and Great Dane are one and the same breed.

The earlier after birth dew claws are removed the better.

Cocoonut oil is a splendid preparation that can be used for the coat.

There is no fixed regulation height for a Bedlington Terrier, their size being indicated by weight.

The most delicate dog is the Bloodhound. Seventy-five per cent. of the puppies that are horn die.

"I would not give much for that man's religion whose dog and cat are not the better for it."—Dr. Norman McLeod.

Bread and milk, buttermilk and paunches, uncleaned, are good for all dogs, especially Collies, but they want change of diet.

From the earliest times men and, according to mythology, the gods themselves, found their most faithful and able sporting assistants in the canine race.

When you order a dog from some kennel or breeder, do not pinch a dollar, and then kick because what you receive is not a bench winner, which is often the case.

Everyone who likes a dog will acknowledge a fancy for the alert little Cocker Spaniel, which makes such a charming pet, is intelligent, easy to learn and presents a fine appearance.

The Fox Terrier is, and should be, a favorite house dog. He is full of tricks, apt at being taught, and his short coat and general aspect of neatness make him peculiarly adapted as a pet for children.

All pedigree dogs can be registered by sending $1 and inclosing pedigree blank to the secretary of American Kennel Club, 55 Liberty street, New York. Registration blanks can be procured of the kennel editor of this journal.

It is not necessary to treat a puppy for distemper until it manifests symptoms of the disease, but it is advisable to treat puppies for worms periodically, say once in two months, whether they appear to be suffering from them or not.

Some dogs show age at five years, but these are generally petted house dogs, which are fed on all kinds of dainties, and get no exercise. When dogs, however, are properly fed and cared for and get a fair amount of exercise, their lives and usefulness may be prolonged for several years beyond what they would attain to when overpetted or overworked and subjected to much exposure.

There is an incident on record where a woman living in Dorchester, Mass., was playing with her pet dog. Suddenly the animal grabbed her hand with his teeth and when the woman drew her hand away she discovered that her diamond was missing from the setting of her ring. The woman prized the dog highly, and would not kill it. She locked it up in a room, and cared for it with unusual attention. In six weeks the dog threw up the diamond.

Too much attention, both at kennels and in the home, cannot be given to the fact that a dog's digestion and, therefore, his bowels, need constant watching and special care. How often does a fine, spirited dog, more especially a hitch, appear dull, listless and without style through neglect of the owner to see that its system is clear of impurities? It seems strange when there are so many simple effective remedies at hand that this is so much overlooked.

The first case in which a direct case of the validity of the testimony based upon the instinct of Bloodhounds, was made at Wahash, Ind., in the month of November, 1898. Gilbert Hoover was arrested, on a criminal charge, with the aid of Bloodhounds. The animals on several trails made direct to Hoover's house, and on this proof the man was arrested. It was claimed, by the defense, that such testimony was inadmissible, but nothing on the subject was found in the law books.

We are all fond of our dogs in a general, patronizing, superior way; but when particulars are condescended upon—well, we feel weighed in the balance and too often found wanting. But there is one period in a dog's life that appeals forcibly to its owner, and that is the period of maternity. At that time they require extra care and nourishment. They are apt to be nervous, and occasionally irritable; but kindness and consideration then are not forgotten by the animal. And remember that for mother and litter absolute cleanliness is imperative.

THE FARM.

Common Cows Make Good Beef Cattle.

It is not only possible to start with common cows as a foundation, and build up a good herd of beef cattle, but it is one of the best moves that the average farmer can make, providing, of course, he has the common cows to begin with. There is no earthly reason why he should sell such a herd and proceed to put a lot of money in well-bred cows. I should advocate building up the herd every time from common stock, so that one would gain experience while making improvements. Place the average man without experience in possession of a fine herd and he will in most cases abuse it through ignorance. If a man cannot breed carefully enough to build up a herd he cannot handle fine-bred animals well enough to keep them up to their standard. If there is going to be any failure it is better to have it out with the common herd so the loss will be less keen.

There is plenty of opposition to the idea of using common cows for building up a good herd of animals for beef purposes; but that opposition is too often of a flimsy nature. A good common cow foundation is an excellent thing. The animals are strong and hardy and they are capable of vast improvements. There will be some in the herd which may be useless. Weed them out gradually and keep on building up with the best. Get a thoroughbred bull and half the battle is then won. The first cross will show some good results, and the second and third will show steady and pronounced improvements. The half bred steers will make good beef, and they will in most cases fatten as easily and rapidly as many full-blooded steers. Good feeding and care are essential, but most owners of good cattle would attend to that without any question.

The reason for advocating the improvement of the common cow for beef purposes is that nine-tenths of young farmers must start life with a herd of them, and they are not provided with any too much money. They would have to pay $100 apiece for thoroughbred cows, and it would be out of the question; but it is within their means to make fair selections from other herds at $30 and $40. If one then gets a thoroughbred bull he cannot only make a living, but have the satisfaction of breeding up his herd so that it will prove almost as satisfactory for beef cows as his neighbor's fancy stock.

STOCKMAN.

In Weaning the Colt.

Before beginning to wean the foal see to it that he is thoroughly halter-broken. It ought to go without saying that the colt should be taught to eat grain before he is taken away from the mare.

Some breeders recommend that the foal be taught to drink cow's milk before he is taken away from the dam.

After weaning, place the colt in an adjoining stall to the mother, or tie in a double stall with the dam, but see to it that there is no danger of the colt's being tied so long as to become tangled with the mother.

It is not best to break a colt off from suckling at once, but do it gradually. If too sudden and the mare is in good flow, the change may cause her some inconvenience, and possibly even injure the udder.

Supply the colt with the best hay that is in the barn; it is presumed the foal eats hay before being taken from the mare.

An excellent grain ration for a colt is two or three parts wheat bran to one part ground oats.

It will very much improve the grain ration if a part of or a tablespoonful of oil meal be added to each feed, but oil meal is powerful in its effect, so start easy.

A colt ought to be able to consume from a quart or two quarts of bran and oatmeal at a ration, depending on the size and age.

Don't forget that the growing foal must have plenty of exercise to develop the legs that will support his growing body.

Keep salt before the colt, or at any rate see to it that he is well supplied with this essential.

The foal should be fed apples and potatoes and coaxed to eat them. Sugar beets in moderation will not hurt it.

Above all things, keep the colt quiet, and do not allow him to become scared in any way. One little accident and scare may last the colt throughout life and always be at a disadvantage.—Goodall's Farmer

Keep Hogs off the Manure Heap.

We know that the hogs do good work in mixing the manure, working it over and keeping it from fermenting, but they do cost their owner a pound of pork for what a man would do for the price of a half pound. And if they root in it during the day they must be driven off it at night, or they will not make any growth at all, and perhaps die from foul air and the heat below them, with a colder air the other side. We once bought a lot of forty shoats that had been in a barn cellar on manure all winter. Though well fed, they were but little larger in the spring than they were the fall before. When we gave them dry beds in a clean place they gained so that in less than two weeks they sold for nearly double the price we paid for them.—American Cultivator.

Fine Bred Cattle for California.

Robert Brown, of the firm of Brown & Brandon, Hicks Valley, who went to Minnesota a month ago to purchase some blooded stock, has returned with several carloads all in good shape, not having lost a hoof on the trip. He purchased thirty-one head of registered Ayrshire cattle at Austin, Minn., from the celebrated herd of J. W. Scott. He also purchased some grandly bred registered Durhams. Messrs. Brown & Brandon have, we believe, the only herd of full-blooded Ayrshires in the State, and find them very profitable cattle in connection with their creamery. Before the cattle had been here long eight head were sold to the Novato Land Company and a fine two-year-old bull to the Pacific Lumber Company of Scotia, Humboldt county.

The Occident Stake of 1902 received 95 entries, by far the largest to that date in the history of the stake, and in 1903 this stake received 98 entries, and should be the richest stake ever trotted for on this Coast, and with only the 1st and 2nd payments made to date is now worth $2220, the 3rd and 4th payments not yet due. The stake for 1904 should receive a larger entry and be very valuable. Every breeder should enter in it.

Cure in All Cases.

Sent Absolutely Free on Receipt of Postal.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. WELLS, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-size bottle."

We want to send to every sufferer a trial treatment of Asthmalene, similar to the one that cured Mr. Wells. We'll send it by mail POSTPAID, ABSOLUTELY FREE OF CHARGE, to any sufferer who will write for it, even on a postal. Never mind, though you're despairing, however bad your case, Asthmalene will relieve and cure. The worse your case, the more glad we are to send it. Do not delay. Write at once, addressing DR. TAFT BROS.' MEDICINE CO., 79 East 130th St., N.Y. City. Sold by all Druggists.

Pursuit and Possession.

Written for the Breeder and Sportsman.

Thar's a heap uv satisfaction when a feller wins a race
With a hoss uv his own breedin'; and a grin 'll crack his face
When drivin' home from market (never countin' on the load).
He passes friends and strangers while a brushin' on the road.
Thar's a lot uv joy and glory if y'er winnin' blues and reds
When the jedges is a tyin' ribbons on the hosses' heads,
But I've often said to swains who wuz a "pressin' of their suit," Possession may be joyful, but there's raptur' in pursoot.

It is so with raisin' hosses, and no matter what success
I hev gained on track or show ring, whether much or more or less,
Thar's a time I feel a pleasure that no other time can give,
And I reckon it'll be so jest so long as I shall live.
It ain't when I am yellin' when my colt is in the lead
As he rushes past the jedges, winnin' on his grit an' speed,
But it's when in early Springtime, Natur' looks jest like a bride
And the old mare's in the pastur' with a new colt by her side.

Then's the time on Sunday mornin', when the day uv rest hez come
And thar's peace and calm and quiet over all the farm and home;
(Tho' the buds is jest a bustin' on the bushes and the trees
And the air is filled with music made by buzzin' of the bees,
And the sweetest of all melodies or tunes or sounds that float,
The medder lark is pourin' from his gray and yellin' throat.)
Mehhe I should go to meetin', but I couldn't if I tried.
When the old mare's in the pastur' with a new colt by her side.

So I go and look him over, and we get acquainted like,
And I figger on his winnin's when he's hitched into a hike
And starts in the Futurity; and then I guess how fast
He'll have to go to win it, and whether he will last
When the pace is hot and furious, and when the heats are split—
And every way I figure I prove that he is "It."
For his sire was a winner at the show and on the track,
While his dam was never headed—goin' out or comin' back.

While I am gazin' at him playin' in the 'filleree,
I allow I'll hev the "BREEDER" tabilate his pedigree
Jest to show the many crosses uv the best uv trottin' lines
With the thoroughbred to hack it; and I'm sure he's all the signs
Of a future trotting champion. And then I pet his dam
And look into the futur' till I don't know where I am,
But I feel he'll reach two minutes sure, and so I swell with pride
When the old mare's in the pastur' with a new colt by her side.

A feelin' uv complacency comes o'er a feller's mind
When he figgers up his earnin's and knows he ain't behind;
Contentment settles in yer heart when, at the close uv life,
Yer know you've allers bin dead squar' with friend 'nd foe 'nd wife.
And God 'll send a recompense most certainly to you
If you've done unto your neighbor what you'd hed him do to you.
But you'll find with all yer treasures (wives or hosses, coin to boot)
That possession may be joyful, but thar's raptur' in pursoot.

NEW BLOOD FOR CALIFORNIA.

Two Stallions That Are Valuable Acquisitions to Its Breeding Ranks.

When Mr. B. S. Krehe of Marysville went East last fall and purchased the stallions Alcyo 2:10 and Pistol 28,884, he not only succeeded in getting two horses whose blood lines are considered royal among the most exclusively royal of the equine families, but he selected stallions that will be most valuable additions to the standard breeding ranks of California.

These two stallions are pictured on this page, and as the photo-engravings are excellent likenesses, little descriptive matter is necessary to enable our readers to judge of their individuality. Alcyo is a bay horse, weighs 1050 pounds and is an individual of rare finish, most pleasant disposition and has the best of feet and limbs. His record is 2:10 and was made in a six heat race in which the fastest heat was 2:09½, which was won by that swift Onward pacer, Gazette 2:07½. As a race horse Alcyo was called the champion of New England as over the tracks of Vermont, Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts he seemed invincible. As a sire, though a comparatively young horse and not put to breeding early, he is proving a wonderful success. He is the sire of Lady Alecy 2:13½, one of the best trotters of her year, and has seven standard performers. Among the new comers to his list this year are Alcyella 2:20½, that was nosed out in 2:16 over a half mile track and worked a mile in 2:15 later. Lois J. another of his get took a record this year of 2:21½, and had a public trial of 2:14½. Besides these, two of his get reduced their records.

Alcyo was sired by the great Alcyone, that sired our great California stallion McKinney 2:11½. Alcyone died young and did not leave a large number of foals, but the proportion of his get that trotted and paced into the list and the number of sons and daughters that are producing speed are marvelous. Alcyone was the greatest son of the great Alma Mater, considering the number of his living foals.

The dam of Alcyo is Louise P. (trial 2:17) who is a great broodmare and has produced Alcyo 2:10, Rosebud 2:26½ and Miss Rose 2:26½. Louise P. is by Sunshine 6831, that is a son of Brignoli 77, who was by Mambrino Chief out of Sallie Woodford, therefore bred just like Woodford Mambrino. The dam of Sunduces strong lusty horses, with style and speed and rugged constitutions that make them ideals on road and track. Alcyo never got a pacer out of a trotting mare, or a trotter out of a pacing mare.

The other stallion, Pistol 28,884, is a perfect prince in breeding. He is a young stallion, having been foaled in 1896. He is a magnificent horse, solid black in color, 15.2½ hands high, and weighed 1075 on the Wilkes out of the equally great Alma Mater, dam of eight, and has himself produced 28 that are in the 2:15 list, 149 in 2:30 and is still living to produce more. But this is not all. The second dam of Pistol is Wenonah, a great broodmare that produced Alaska 2:27½ and the producing horse Montezuma 2:24½ that sired Roscoe 2:12½ and others. Wenonah's sire was Curtis Hambletonian (a son of Hambletonian 10 and Dolly Martin by

ALCYO 2:10.

10th of this month. He is a grandly modeled horse, well ribbed, feet and legs like steel, has an excellent disposition and a wonderful turn of speed. He has never been raced, but Mr. Krehe will place him in Defiance) and her dam was another of the greatest of broodmares, famous Jessie Pepper, founder of a great family.

Just stop for a moment and consider the great broodmares in the pedigree of Pistol. Green Mountain Maid, Shanghai Mary, the Charles Kent mare, Wenonah, Alma Mater and Jessie Pepper. Then the sires—Lancelot, Messenger Duroc, Hambletonian 10, Abdallah 1, Harry Clay 45, Alcantara, George Wilkes, Mambrino Patchen and Mambrino Chief. The doubling up of these blood lines has produced a splendid individual in Pistol and a horse that has every promise of being great on the track and successful in the stud. For years we have advised California breeders that it was time that new blood was being brought to this State, as to keep up with the procession it is necessary to get the best from the East to unite with the best we have here, and these two stallions give owners here just this opportunity. Mr. Krehe is to be not only congratulated, but thanked for his enterprise in securing these two grand specimens of the great American trotting family. He will take them to San Jose in January and place them in the stud at $100 the season for each. Later on in these columns, particulars as to pasturage, etc., will be given, although we understand that Mr. Krehe has secured the best piece of pasture land in Santa Clara county whereon to pasture his mares.

At the Fasig-Tipton sale, when the announcement was made that Peter Stirling had gone to the oldest road driver in the world, Mr. Work, the garden rang with applause, showing what a favorite he is with the horsemen. At $9200 the champion three year old of this year went for far less than he would if Mr. Work had not wanted him. David Lamar and other New York men stood ready to pay $15,000, but when they knew Mr. Work wanted him they would not bid. After the sale David Bonner said to me, writes Ed Cogswell, of Boston: "Mr. Work was all carried away with Peter Stirling, because he resembled to such a degree his old favorite, Edward, pole mate to Dick Swiveler, and he would have gone to $15,000 rather than to have lost him. Now, Mr. Work is going to do something with this horse which will surprise many who think him wedded entirely to the speedway; that is, to race him when a five year old. The coming year he will use him on the road."

Ed Geers describes how he feeds his horses during the winter months as follows: "We cook their feed thoroughly every day all winter long, and give them as much as we find they eat. Mornings they get lots of hay and cut oats dampened and showered with bran. Noons cooked feed and carrots, and at night cooked feed and more hay. Nothing better for them than plenty of carrots in the cold weather, and in spring their coats lie all the better for having had them."

Jackson's Napa Soda does not tangle the feet!

shine was a daughter of Edwin Forrest 49. The breeding of Sunshine is very similar to that of the great Mambrino King as he was by Mambrino Patchen a son of Mambrino Chief, and out of a daughter of Edwin Forrest.

Lady Richardson, the second dam of Alcyo was by Tiram Drow, a son of the half thoroughbred Drew Horse, that sired two standard trotters and the dams of seven, and had two producing sons.

Alcyo's breeding is as good as his individuality. It is stout blood all the way through, blood that pro-training after having made a short season with him and it is fully expected Pistol will get a trotting record of 2:10. He has one colt that is two years old and that colt is one of the greatest prospects in Rhode Island.

One glance at Pistol's pedigree is enough to stamp it as of the choicest. He was sired by Lancelot 2:23, a half brother of the great Electioneer, being by Messenger Duroc out of Green Mountain Maid, the dam of nine in the list. The dam of Pistol is Peperomia by Alcantara 2:23, and here we get another wonderful cross for speed as Alcantara is by the great George

SANTA ROSA STOCK FARM.

BY WM. G. LAYNE.

There are only a few of the stock farms in existence to-day which at one time made California famous, but the Santa Rosa Stock Farm, owned by the Pierce Bros., is one that is very much in evidence and has over its gateway the word "progression." For years these gentlemen have been improving their stud of borses and mares and in the rich paddocks at Santa Rosa are to be seen some of the best-bred trotting stock in the United States. Money was not spared in the purchase of choicely bred individuals, when prices were extremely high, too, but the wisdom of the buyer is observable in the excellence of the broodmares there.

Before going into a detailed description of the famous stallions and matrons, and their produce, perhaps it would be well to speak of the place where the fastest trotting mare in the United States this year—Dolly Dillon 2:07—first saw the light of day.

The farm is one of the best appointed in California, its paddocks are always green, its box stalls large and commodious; the water is the purest, and its mile race track stands pre-eminent among all the "fast" ones on the Pacific Coast as the "fastest and best." It is so easy to reach this farm that its location makes it one of the attractions of Santa Rosa, the "City of Roses." Just inside its eastern boundary, this hedge-bordered nursery of trotters has the reputation of being one of the few places that the residents take pleasure in, and visitors from all parts of the world are taken there and shown the galaxy of handsome animals that always elicit words of highest praise.

With climate unsurpassed, a total absence of heavy fogs and winds, abundance of feed and water, a soil

2:18; Juno, dam of Mercury 2:21, and Ida 2:30, by Venture 2:27, second dam s. t. b. by Algerine, a son of Hambletonian 725. Sidney Dillon's brother, Cupid, is the sire of Venus 2:11, Psyche 2:16, and Lottie Parks 2:16. Sidney Dillon is the sire of Dolly Dillon 2:07, (the fastest mare of the year 1901) B. S. Dillon 2:25, and Captivity 2:28. There is no reason why he should not prove one of the greatest sires in California. He has never been trained, as an individual he is exceedingly handsome and bloodlike.

L. W. Russell, a six year old, occupies the box stall opposite. He is by the great stallion, Stamboul 2:07, out of Bye Bye (dam of Marengo King, 2:29), and four others that will get records next year) by Nutwood 2:18, second dam Rapidan by Dictator, etc. L. W. Russell is proving quite a sire; he has to his credit Lady Russell 2:26, Madonna Russell 2:25, Pansy Russell (3) 2:30, and Almaretta 2:25, winner Stanford stake 1901.

The two campaigning mares from this farm, Dolly Dillon 2:07 and Janice 2:09, have demonstrated that they were top-notchers among the best and gamest trotters in the United States. Arriving in the East and being taken sick, they were only partially recovered when the bell rang for them to start, but they went "down the line," and forced the best Eastern campaigners to do their best and then defeated most of them. The Eastern turf journals were lavish in their praises of these two Santa Rosa Stock Farm trotters, and before the racing season ended they proved they were in every way worthy of these laudatory notices.

No outside sire is held at too high a price, however, for the owners to breed their mares to, and as the great horse McKinney 2:11, is the leading stallion in California, a number of the yearling colts and fillies in this collection that were sired by him show that the dams are as royally bred as any he has ever been mated with. I will give the color and sex of each as they were pointed out, and, to students of bloodlines Bay colt by McKinney 2:11, dam Bonsilene 2:14 by Stamboul 2:07; second dam Bon Bon (dam of Bonnie Direct 2:05, Bonsilene 2:14) by Simmons; grandam Bonnie Wilkes 2:29 (dam of Bonnie Nutwood 2:29) by Geo. Wilkes 519, etc.

Bay colt by McKinney 2:11 out of Stamboulita 2:27 by Stamboul 2:07; second dam Biscari (dam of Stamboulita 2:27, Guycara 2:18, B. S. Dillon 2:25 and Stamboul 2:18) by Director 2:17; second dam Bicara (dam of Panceast 2:21, etc.) by Harold; third dam Belle by Mambrino Chief.

Bay filly weanling by McKinney 2:11 out of Bye Bye by Nutwood, etc.

Besides these grandly bred youngsters and mares there is Lilly Stanley 2:17, old-time sulky (dam of Rokeby 2:13, Rect 2:16, On Stanley 2:17, etc.), by Whippleton.

Palo Belle by Palo Alto out of Belle Isle by Piedmont.

Silvereye (dam of Ramona 2:17, Fram 2:17) by Abbottsford; second dam by Harry Williamson, son of Williamson's Belmont.

Captive (dam of Captivity 2:28) and Norrisivity 2:28) by Piedmont; dam Clariurso by Electioneer.

Athenian by Steinway 2:25 out of Ida Wood (dam of Owyhee 2:11 and Babe Marion 2:17) by Simmons, etc.

Pansy (dam of Almonition 2:24, Pansy Russell (3) 2:30, King Orry 2:21, Lady Russell (3) 2:26, etc.) by C. M. Clay Jr. 2:2; second dam Lady Richelieu by Richelieu.

Space forbids us going into more details regarding these few and about seventy others by such sires as Diahlo 2:09, Directum 2:05, Sidney 2:19, Chas. Derby 2:20, Simmocolon 2:13, Anteeo 2:16, Director 2:17, Gen. Benton, Bay Rose 2:20, Altamont 2:26, Electioneer, Piedmont and Poscora Hayward.

On the same principle as Palo Alto, every youngster on the farm is for sale and seekers after individuals that have the richest and most fashionable breeding in the United States can easily be satisfied and the prices asked for them are very reasonable.

There are four young stallions here which can also be purchased at low figures, and any farmer or horse breeder who is desirous of getting first class standard bred individuals will do well to visit this farm and make his selection. On Stanley 2:17 by Direct 2:05 out of Lilly Stanley 2:17, the great broodmare; Inferno 2:24 by Diahlo 2:09 out of Biscari (dam of 4) by Director 2:17, etc.; Fram 2:17 by Direct 2:05 out of Silver Eye (dam of 2) by Abbottsford, and Beau Brummel 2:16 by Wildnut out of Nettie Benton (dam of 3) by Gen. Benton, grandam Nellie Walker (dam of 2 in 2:25) by son of Edwin Forrest. These are all young horses of size, excellent in color and perfect in conformation and all have records.

The best of care is taken of all the horses on this farm. And every colt or filly that is well bred is extensively entered in all the leading trotting stakes. No expense is spared to have all the youngsters carefully bitted, trained and prepared for use. There are only a few farms in California to-day where royally bred trotters are bred and properly cared for and the Santa Rosa Stock Farm is the equal of any, and seekers after first class horses for the road or track will be cordially received and honestly dealt with.

W. W. and M. B. Porter of Denver have sold their string of 103 fine bred horses to A. R. and P. E. Gumaer of Fremont county for $35,000 and have permanently retired from the business. It is the intention of the Gumaer brothers to establish the finest ranch of blooded horses in that State. Both are men of wealth and will spend thousands of dollars in the enterprise. Among the horses bought is the famous stallion Saraway, sire of Winfield Stratton, owned by George Estabrook, which has a record of 2:13, and the saddle stallion Rex Denmark Jr., sire of Glideway, who was bought a year ago by James Wallace and taken to California. The three mares of note in the bunch are Frances Dunleavy, Orriway and Vioway. The remainder of the animals are broodmares and geldings.

Jackson's Napa Soda is sold in every city, town and hamlet in the State.

that anything planted in it outrivals in rapidity of growth that of any other for great productiveness, is it any wonder that the colts and fillies here show greater physical development than those bred and reared in other less favored sections? Dame Nature has lavished her blessings with hountiful hand on all the equine representatives and they show the marked effects of this generosity, for finer, stronger and more playful trotters, I have never seen on any farm, and I have visited almost every noted one in California.

The track itself is PERFECTION. No other word can do it justice. Look at the long list of performers that yearly lower records over its smooth surface and never become disabled or injured. In this respect it is "safe" as well as "fast." Its yielding surface does not jar from wire to wire and not a soft or uneven spot can be found upon it. To enumerate the horses that have lowered their records over it would take up too much space in this limited article, suffice it to say, however, that when a horse has done his best everywhere else when taken here he can generally lower his record, in fact, everyone that has tried to do so, has succeeded.

The farm contains over one hundred acres of the richest land in the valley and when walking knee-deep among the alfalfa last Tuesday morning, I was shown the various mares, geldings, colts and fillies, I could not help saying, "Mr. Pierce, if we could only take all our Eastern friends into this field this bright December morning and show them these sleek looking animals do you think they would ever best of their climate or borses again."

The two oldest stallions of this farm through their progeny show that Messrs. Pierce Bros., have made no mistake in breeding their mares to them.

they will form a most interesting subject, while for judges of form they will appeal most strongly to their highest idea of what perfectly shaped youngsters should be:

Bay colt by McKinney 2:11, dam Bye Bye (dam of Marengo King 2:29), full sister to Lockheart 2:08 by Nutwood 2:18, and the next dam was Rapidan (dam of Capt. Mack 2:29, Rapid 2:22, etc.) by Dictator; third dam Madam Headley (dam of Expert Prince 2:13, etc.) by Edwin Forrest.

Black colt by McKinney 2:11, dam Biscari (dam of Stamboulita 2:27, B. S. Dillon 2:25, Guycara 2:18 and Stamboul 2:18), by Director 2:17, second dam Bicara (dam of Panceast 2:21, and five other 2:30 performers; four sons sired fifty and her daughters are the dams of nine 2:30 performers), by Harold; third dam Belle (dam of Hambletonian 2:26, and Belmont, sire of Nutwood, etc.), by Mambrino Chief.

Bay colt by McKinney 2:11, dam Carlotta Wilkes (dam of Volita 2:24), by Charley Wilkes 2:21 son of Red Wilkes; second dam Aspasia (dam of Arrival 2:24 and Evolution 2:25), by Alcantara 2:23; third dam Miss Buchanan (dam of Escape 2:26), by Clark Chief 89. There's enough Geo. Wilkes and Alma Mater blood in this lusty fellow to suit anyone.

Bay filly by McKinney 2:11 out of By Guy by Guy Wilkes 2:15 out of Bye Bye (dam of Marengo King 2:29), by Nutwood, etc.

Bay filly by McKinney 2:11 out of Au Revoir (sister to By Guy), and will make a splendid mate for her sister in blood.

Bay colt by McKinney 2:11, dam Rose Russell by Bay Rose 2:20, dam Oakley Russell by Happy Russell 2:21 (he by Mambrino Russell out of Odd Stocking (dam of Spriglock 2:19, Boniface 2:29, Happy Russell 2:21) by Happy Medium; second dam Oakley by Orestes 1920; third dam Belle Harris.

THE LAWRENCE-WILLIAMS CO., Cleveland, Ohio

STAR SPEEDWAY TROTTERS OF NEW YORK.

BY EVERETT L. SMITH (PERCY).

No city in all America has as many fast record horses in daily use on the roads as are owned right here in Greater New York. Some cost a small fortune, yet others seemingly a mere trifle when the fun their owners have is considered.

Mr. E. E. Smathers paid $10,000 or $11,000 for his bay mare Iva Dee 2:12½, yet purchased her to race the Grand Circuit rather than for legitimate roadster usage. Mr. Frank Work bid $5700 for the fast gray gelding Pilot Boy 2:09½, securing him especially to drive in Central Park and over Seventh avenue, and at the recent sale gave $9200 for the three year old Peter Stirling 2:11½, also for use on the road. The veteran roadite does not use the Speedway often as it is too crowded and he too old to take chances there.

Mr. F. F. Ayer paid $7500 for the elegant son of Superior, Success 2:10½, and retired him to the road never intending to race him again. Few know Success as Mr. Ayer is not given to securing notoriety so does most of his fast driving alone at hours when the famous speed reservation is about deserted.

No more perfect trotter has ever been retired to the road than Mr. Nathan Straus' elegant old chestnut gelding Cobwebs 2:12, and yet Mr. Straus secured him at a bargain counter figure, back in 1895, when Andrew J. Welch sold him.

Mr. Welch bid $1800 or $2000, I forget which, at Fasig's Old Glory sale, and as he frequently does, resold him right away at a fair advance. I think Mr. Straus once told me he paid 10 per cent. advance. However that may be, Cobwebs could not be duplicated for $10,000 to $25,000.

He is in a class by himself as a road horse. Never since Mr. Straus added him to his chattels has Cobwebs made a break, and rarely has he been defeated at the speedway.

Neat, trim, racy little Louise Mac 2:09½ cost Mr. A. B. Gwathmey $4750, I think it was, at the Old Glory sale of 1899 after Scott Hudson had raced her so well.

She showed a mile to road cart in 2:10 one afternoon while I was acting the railbird and at Independence, Ia., she and Askey 2:08½ raced head and head out to the half mile post in 1:00½. I say "out" because it is a kite shaped track at Independence, and there are two long stretches and but one turn as all know who have seen those once favored institutions, now so suddenly out of style.

Louise could probably trot a mile in 2:06½ to 2:07½ under favorable conditions, so was a decided bargain. Some one should buy her, then get as fast a mate; then we should see the pole records go to pieces in short order. At the speedway Louise Mac is one of the brightest particular stars, and few can get up to her wagon wheels.

Last fall when the Village Farm sold The Abbot and other good horses, Mr. Geers picked up The Monk at $1025, or some such matter, knowing he would race and race sound. But he did not drive him a heat all season, as Mr. Fred Gerken wanted the son of Chimes and made too good an advance tender to be refused. Just what it was I've never accurately heard related; some say $1500, others believe it was nearer $2500. It has never leaked out, however.

To-day The Monk cannot be bought for any mere trifle, as Mr. Gerken, I know, has several times refused $7500, and I know a man who is willing to pay $8000 to secure the great trotter. The asking price is about $15,000, I suppose, which might include an agent's commission of 10 per cent., as Mr. Gerken is not a mean man.

At Hartford he was trained separately a mile in 2:06½, and at Detroit I know stepped one beat in 2:07. Here at the Empire City track he won a heat to wagon in 2:10, a quarter of a second below the world's wagon race record. When just at an edge The Monk is a 2:05 trotter surely.

Last winter our genial roadite, Mr. Charles C. Lloyd, journeyed to Chicago and returned with a bill of sale of the fast Red Heart trotter, Chain Shot, record then 2:11½, in his pocket. The figure quoted was $5000, and it didn't take Mr. Lloyd ten minutes to decide that he wanted to become Chain Shot's owner after a trial on the road behind the great horse.

To-day Chain Shot is the fastest trotter used on any city's streets regularly driven by his owner, and to say that he is safe, high class and sensationally fast is to put it all too mildly by far. Last month he took a record of 2:06½, jogging the homestretch at the last end of it. Behind him that day was the fast trotters Dolly Dillon 2:07 and Onward Silver 2:08.

If the grand young trotter meets no setbacks before the next racing season opens he will reach 2:04 sure, as experts all agree that Mr. McDonald could have driven out the 2:06½ heat in that notch.

Mr. F. T. Bodford, the Standard Oil magnate, paid $8000, it is said, for York Boy 2:09½, that had raced all of 1900 very brilliantly. As all know, his son Charlie does the Bodford training, and in days gone by has driven Gillette 2:11½, a mile in 2:14 over the Parkway half-mile track on the Ocean Boulevard and others of his father's horses some very fast miles at times.

A week or so ago young Mr. Bodford stepped York Boy a mile to sulky in 2:10 at Parkway, and the final eighth was trotted in 15 seconds, a two-minute clip as officially timed from the judges' stand. Election day being so favorable for a special trial, Mr. Bodford's party drove down to the track to give the fast son of Wilkes Boy one more whirl against the watch that favors no competition.

This time Mr. Bodford selected the J. H. Shults mile track to do his fast work over, and when he reached there they had cut three seconds from the old figure for that stretch of prepared loam, the mile being trotted in 2:09½. Pretty fast for amateurs; but wait, the best is to come.

Saturday last York Boy was tried to a light speed wagon, and over the parkway half-mile track this time. The mile was trotted in the remarkable time of 2:13½, and is the fastest move to wagon yet recorded there. Remember, the track record of 2:06½ is held by old Joe Patchen 2:01½, and made to a 23 pound bike sulky. The track's race record is 2:07½, and was made by the famous hopped pacer Coney 2:02, and York Boy's best mile in public to a sulky is but 2:09½.

He is certainly high class, and among the best ever seen here.

Nathan Straus' second string—Alves 2:09½—probably the fastest mile horse that he owns—was purchased for $2750 from Fire Commissioner John Scannell in 1899. He cost Mr. Scannell $1550 the fall previous at the Old Glory sale.

Charles A. Thompson, of this city, gave him his present record in a dash race at the Empire City track, the finish between Alves and Louise Mac being so close that we in the press box could not determine which had won the heat. Judges who officiated that day told me Alves won it by about three inches.

ZOMBRO 2:11.

A. E. Thompson drove over the speedway one day in 1899 with a little bay mare that he said never was started and he called Queen Wilkes. She was bought at a very low price when the J. I. Case horses were auctioned here and he valued her at $500.

Before the sun went down that afternoon Queen Wilkes had made a reputation and jumped to $2500 valuation. She led many high cost trotters over the road and did it in true race horse style, so Chas. Weiland, after angling awhile, gave $1500, I think, for her.

She kept winning and one day E. E. Smathers drew his check for about $3000 to become her owner, deciding she was good enough for the $10,000 M. & M. stake for 2:24 class trotters at Detroit. But after showing 2:20 the Queen pulled up with a bowed tendon which put her out of the stake and left her a cripple for several months. Veterinary surgeons, you know, have a way of patching up these things, and so when George Spear went to Louisville Queen Wilkes was shipped to shape up for her postponed M. & M. start.

She showed very fast workouts at the Falls City, but was turned out to get good and strong so as to race in 1902. To-day she is one of the reigning sensations at the speedway, and if she starts next season 2:12 will not trouble her a great deal to negotiate, for she has truly wonderful speed capacity and stamina of the highest order as proved by her day to day conflicts while meeting the topnotchers.

Sometimes a change of owners benefits a trotter immensely. This was illustrated when Charles Weiland secured A. B. Gwathmey's great road mare Salient in exchange for Lorna McGregor (trial half 1:06½) a year ago. Mr. Gwathmey gave a check for $600 and Salient for Lorna McGregor and used the latter as a pole-mate to Louise Mac for awhile.

Weiland went to work on Salient with a will, knowing that she could trot quarters in 32 seconds to wagon, and one forenoon when thousands stood watching the fast ones at the speedway, surprised all by leading the crack Chicago trotter Franker 2:11, over the upper stretch at a whirlwind clip.

That settled it with Mr. Gwathmey. He longed to once again own the beautiful bay mare, so drew his check for $500, and with Lorna McGregor as the balance secured his former love. Salient is to-day back in the Gwathmey string and regarded by many as Louise Mac's equal as a road mare.

She has no record, but at times has given the crack Cobwebs a hard brush over the upper flat. No owner lets his horse get away with Salient if she chances to be a half length in the lead, as there is a fearfully fast stern chase to come, for Salient can brush the distance at a 2:10 clip to a wagon almost any "fast" day.

Dr. John F. Moore wanted a trotter to replace his speedway cup winner, McMillan 2:17½, so picked up the great trotter of 1896, Page 2:09½, that had been quite overlooked at the Old Glory speed sale last fall.

Dr. Moore, I guess, gave $1000 or $1200 for Page, and secured a star of the first water, for he has rarely lost a brush at speedway park in the past six months. The doctor and Mr. Straus drove a dead heat with Page and Cobwebs but the other day, and those who were present say the half must have been covered as fast as 1:04 or 1:05.

As Dr. Moore drives for pleasure, Page will never again see a race track, yet were he tried at the wagon game I fully believe 2:15 would be mere play for him to negotiate. He is not a ready catcher if he chances to make a mistake, and likes a clear path once he is started at speed. At the speedway so many outsiders cut in to interrupt a brush, Dr. Moore has to drive long halves to get around the hunches without letting his horse leave his stride.

I've seen Fleming drive Page a half in 1:03½ and a quarter in 30½ seconds at the speedway, and that day he could have held his own with The Monk, Alves, Cobwebs, or even Chain Shot. They all have one very great day, you know, and before or since Page never has had that inspiration conducive to such high class form.

The day Myron E. McHenry drove Azote in 2:05½ over old Fleetwood Park the late Robert Bonner offered $10,000 for him.

That astute horseman, Monroe Salisbury, from San Francisco, knew Azote to be quite nearly Queen Alix's capacity as to extreme speed, so held out for $15,000. The horse cost him $1500 when a partial cripple.

Salisbury, though a severe trainer and master, is a famous patcher up of cripples, and after fussing with his big trotter a while got him good enough to win over $20,000 worth of races. At Galesburg McDowell gave him a record of 2:04½ that lasted as the gelding record for trotters till the day The Abbot trotted in 2:04 here last season. Twice Azote went wrong, twice they got him out and raced him, but last fall he was auctioned here and at $525 the meteoric David Lamar became his owner, retiring him to the speedway. He placed him in the sale last week and Mr. Joseph E. Leggett of Troy got him for $425. It is a hard life, speedway life, and Azote, having a soft spot in his anatomy, cannot trot the clip he once could, yet I've seen him down some of our latter day celebrities up there, and no gamer trotter ever scored for the word or turned to a wagon on the road for a brush to the end. Too bad he could not have remained a sound horse, for great as is King Cresceus, I shall always believe Azote would have reached the two-minute line, and Andy McDowell and Monroe Salisbury would have been offered $75,000 to $100,000 for him just for show purposes. But he didn't.

Of a Royal Line.

GLOSTER—Is it not the king?
LEAR—Ay, every inch a king—King Lear.

Well might one, while looking at the beautiful photo-engraving on this page, say with Lear, "Ay, every inch a king," for such is Zombro 2:11, the greatest racing son of McKinney, and destined to be one of the very greatest of producing stallions. The readers of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN are all familiar with the history of this young sire, both as regards his breeding and his racing abilities. Sired by Alcyone's greatest son and from a family in the female line that has furnished more beauty and high finish than any other to standard bred horses, namely, the Almonts, he has fulfilled every promise of his youth. He was the greatest three year old of his year in America and his racing career thereafter proved him as game and bulldog a trotter as ever put hoof on a track. He was retired to the stud four years ago and the first of his get started this season. The first Zombro colt or filly to start in a race was Italia, who, taken "out of a sick bed" as it were, won the Occident stake at Sacramento in three straight heats, pulled up at the finish of each mile to save getting a fast mark, but gaining a record of 2:23½. She could have beaten 2:20 easily, and four weeks before had worked a mile in 2:15, but two days after this fast trial was taken down with the prevalent "horse disease" and was near death. A blister was put on her throat that took off a square foot of hair, and only by the best of skill and working night and day did her trainer succeed in getting her to the race. But she got there with all four of her nimble feet and is considered one of the greatest prospects for 1902. Two more of Zombro's get started this year. They were in the stake given by the Oregon State Fair. They finished one, two, in the race but failed to get standard records as there was a pouring rain and the track was a sea of mud. Another of Zombro's three year olds is the trotting filly, Zephyr, that C. A. Winship of Los Angeles took to Cleveland last summer and sold for $9000 after showing a mile with her in 2:14½.

Breeders did not wait this year for the youngsters above enumerated to make their mark on the track and in the salesring before booking mares to Zombro, but filled his book with as grand a list of producing mares as were ever bred to a trotting stallion on the Pacific Coast. Zombro will make the season of 1902 at the Sacramento race track until June 1st and will then be taken to Oregon for a summer season. Those who patronage him will be wise as his produce will be the topnotchers of the sales when they are old enough to place on the market, and that he will continue to sire extreme speed and game race horses is as certain as the sun shines in California in the summer time.

Headed for 2:05.

The fastest mile made by a trotter on the California circuit this year was the heat in 2:10½, trotted by the strikingly handsome mare Anzella in the second heat of a race at Woodland, where she met and defeated Iora 2:11½ and Jack W. 2:12½. Seldom have three such handsome trotters started in a race together, and it was the general remark that any one of them would be conspicuous for beauty even on the New York speedway. Iora took the first heat of this race in 2:11½, but Anzella then went on and won, trotting the three remaining heats in 2:10½, 2:11 and 2:11½, a good performance on any track and proving that she is of Grand Circuit quality, as she is as sound and clean as a deer and has not yet reached the limit of her speed by a good deal. Anzella was bred by Thomas Ronan, of Dayton, Washington, but has been trained and was driven in all her races by her present owner, Geo. A.

ANZELLA 2:10 1-2.

Kelly, who is now a resident of Pleasanton, Cal. Anzella is as well bred as any of the fast trotters, although her blood lines may not be as familiar as some. She is by Antrim 5918, who is a son of Aberdeen 27 out of Hyanna by Hylas 831. Antrim is the sire of six in 2:30, among his performers being that fast and wonderfully game mare, Antrima 2:15½. Aberdeen 27 was one of the great representatives of the Hambletonian 10-American Star cross, and has 52 of his produce in the list, and 32 producing sires and 30 producing daughters. The dam of Anzella is Hazel Kirk by Alwood 972, he by Almont 33 out of a daughter of Blackwood 74. The second dam of Anzella is a mare by Adams' Bellfounder; her third dam, Lady Comet, was the dam of Wonder 2:27½.

Anzella was foaled in 1895, and as a four year old started at Salem, Oregon. She was beaten the first heat in 2:19½, won the second heat in 2:17½ and the next two heats in 2:18 and 2:18½. The next race in the same place she won in three straight heats. The next week she started in two races at Yakima and won both in three straight heats. Then Mr. Kelly took her East and started her at Terre Haute, where she won second money in the 2:16 class, being beaten by Sister Alice in 2:17½, 2:15½ and 2:14½. She won at Davenport, Ia., in the 2:15 class, getting a mark of 2:14½ in a five heat race, trotting the last heat in 2:16½. At Hedrick, Ia., in the 2:16 class, she won a five heat race, making a record in the fifth heat of 2:13½. In the East she started 9 times and was only outside of the money once. In her four year old form she started 4 times and won every race. Last year as a five year old she started 9 times and won three races, was second twice, third once, divided third and fourth money once; was fourth twice, and behind the money once. This year she started 4 times and won every race, getting a mark of 2:10½ at Woodland in a four heat race.

From the speed she has shown in her races this year, there is sufficient reason to predict for her a mark of 2:05. Mr. Kelly, her owner and trainer, has trotted her quarters in 30 seconds repeatedly and while she has never been driven a mile in her work at the top of her speed it is known by every person who has seen her race that she always comes the last part of the mile faster than the rest, and that no matter how far behind she has been at the start, no distance has seemed too great for her to make up, and the wonderful speed and gameness she has shown at the end of the race has been a subject of comment on all sides. She is a bright bay with white markings, and for beauty of conformation, racing ability and disposition will be prominent in any company. She will very likely be taken East and raced on the Grand Circuit next year and if so, the horse that beats her in the 2:11 or 2:10 classes will get the money.

A High Class Stallion For Los Angeles.

In the ranks of the standard bred horses of California there will be much breeding done during 1902, more perhaps than during any year since 1892, and on the farms in the citrus belt of Southern California a very large proportion of the standard mares will be bred. In response to a demand that could hardly be declined, Mr. Geo. A. Davis, of Pleasanton, will send his magnificent stallion Rey Direct, race record 2:10, to Los Angeles, where he will be mated with some of the best mares in the south.

Rey Direct is one of our favorite horses, not alone for his splendid individuality and grand blood lines, but because he has demonstrated that he can reproduce in his foals size, solid color and symmetry of form with such uniformity that he is certain to found a family of his own—one that will be as distinctly characteristic as the Morgans of Vermont.

He is a young horse yet, being but six years old and his first crop of foals will be but two years old in the spring, consequently none have ever been worked for speed, but they are such a grand lot that they have already attracted the attention of breeders who are looking for the best in looks and conformation as well as speed. He was bred to 31 mares in 1900 and in 1901

Rey Direct was raced through the California circuit in 1900 and was one of the largest money winners and most notable horses of the circuit. He won the only eight beat race that year, a race that was paced over a slow track in a wind that was almost a gale. Rey Direct is a grandly made black stallion and one of the best bred ones in the country. He is by the mighty Direct 2:05½, the champion of his day and a horse that is siring champions. His dam Vera 2:22½, by Kentucky Volunteer, is the dam also of De Veras 2:11½, another fast new performer for last year. Lady Graves, his second dam, produced Lady Maxim 2:16½ and was by the old champion Smuggler 2:15½, and his third dam was by Excelsior Morgan.

Rey Direct was foaled in 1895 and was purchased by Mr. Geo. Davis of Pleasanton, as a yearling. He was bred by Huntley & Clark of Toston, Montana, who also bred his dam. Another brother to Rey Direct and De Veras, a four year old, is named Charles G. and is quite a promising trotter, although he has, as yet, no record. He is owned by James Sutherland of Pleasanton. The breeders of Southern California will find no stallion more worthy of patronage, nor one that gives greater promise as a sire. If there is anything in individuality, breeding, extreme speed and prepotency, Rey Direct is one of the greatest of our young California stallions.

REY DIRECT 2:10

AT THE SHRINE OF ROBT. MCGREGOR

BY T. J. CROWLEY.

A few weeks ago I paid a visit to the city of Toledo, Ohio, which was occasioned by matters of business and pleasure. Accompanied by my "better half," whose former home it was, and it being my first visit to the city, my first duty was to visit friends and family acquaintances. Afterwards, being at full liberty, I sought scenes around that almost ancient city that best suited my taste.

Toledo is situated on the shore of Lake Erie, at the mouth of the Maumee River. The lake is remarkable for the summer scenery along its borders, and its health resorts are largely patronized.

Being domiciled at the St. Charles Hotel, about my first introduction was to that affable gentleman, ite monument, as a tribute to that horse's immortal greatness:—

ROBERT MCGREGOR
Monarch of the Home Stretch
Foaled 1871. Died 1898.
A Sire of Great Race Horses.

As I stood on the spot that covers the hero. And thought of his greatness, of equines the Nero Of all that is horse flesh, his name is most precious. He produced and he left us the champion Cresceus.

Greater writers and worthier pens have written volumes on the character and becoming greatness of this wonderful horse. It would, therefore, be only superfluity on my part to attempt to enlarge upon his career as a race-horse and sire. The progeny he has left behind are living monuments to his immortal fame, and, as for me, there is a warm place in my bosom for the dead hero, having owned and raced successfully for three seasons a lineal descendant, who, like the Scottish clans of old, carried the colors of the McGregor to victory.

CRESCUS 2:02 1-4.

Mr. Thacker, of the "Toledo Blade," a paper made famous by its former owner, C. E. Locke, known to the world as Petroleum V. Nashy, whose humorous writings and quaint sayings procured for him a world-wide reputation. Mr. Thacker proved to be possessed of a high degree of culture and a knowledge of affairs in general, which made his companionship a very agreeable circumstance to me, for not only was he posted on state and national affairs, but also on a subject that was more than agreeable to me, viz., the horse.

Knowing that Toledo was the home of the present champion of the trotting turf, and had also been that of his illustrious sire, it was my earnest desire to see the Ketcham farm; so accordingly one morning during my stay at Toledo, I went out to that heralded spot, which I reached about 10:00 A. M. Cresceus, for that is the name the Ketcham farm is now known by, is situated about seven miles due west from Toledo, on the Sylvania turnpike, and can be reached by electric cars in about three-quarters of an hour. On my arrival, I was met by an employee with the usual courteous, "Good morning, sir;" and, after telling him who I was, and where I came from, received a very hearty greeting, and at the same time the information that Mr. Ketcham was probably looking for me in California, as the news had been received that Mr. Ketcham had already reached this state with the great Cresceus.

This preliminary talk over, I was escorted to a box stall to see a full brother to the champion. To say that I was disappointed puts it mildly, for in looks he is anything but attractive, being small and neither handsome nor possessing any of those fine qualities one may expect to find in the brother of the unrivaled Cresceus.

In looking over the band of brood mares in the open field, I was pleased and gratified to see two mares which I had often seen in on the California turf, and which, I am glad to know, are to be mated with Cresceus next spring. They are the mares Venus II and Czarina, the one with a mark of 2:11½ and the other one of 2:13¾, and are the property of that enterprising and astute gentleman, A. B. Sprackels, Esq. What should be the result of these matings? If high-class breeding, gameness, and speed amount to anything, then the produce should eventually appear in the front rank of trotters, and win fame for their owner, as well as their sire and dams.

Ah, what is this! I am next called upon to behold as I am escorted to the last resting-place of the sire of Cresceus, the champion trotter? Over his grave the kindly Mr. Ketcham has fittingly erected a gran-

The Ketcham farm contains about 1,000 acres of rather poor land, being of sandy soil and unpretentious. Still, it may be said to compare favorably with the many breeding farms of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois; but in no way can it compare with the beautiful breeding establishments of California. It is fairly well supplied with paddocks, box stalls, and stabling, but there is no track on which to train or drive except about a half mile straightaway, which is to jog horses on and to keep them in condition until they are sent to regular tracks for final preparation.

Among the horses on the farm I was introduced to his old Charley Friel, 2:15¾. "This fellow," said my informant, "is the first horse that Mr. Ketcham campaigned successfully through the Grand Circuit, many years ago." Charley is a son of Allie West, and is now 24 years of age. His record was made to a high-wheel sulky, and he looks as though he could be again taken up and sent down the line.

Another horse on the farm that particularly attracted my attention is a three-year-old colt, by Cresceus; and if speedy action and good looks count, this fellow will become a credit to his illustrious sire. This colt and his dam were, to my mind, about the best lookers on the farm.

Mr. Ketcham does not boast of having a very extensive breeding farm, as the few mares there well signify; but these few are of the choicest breeding, and I was informed that it is his intention to add to the number by purchasing only the best.

After inspecting the horses, I next visited the beautiful club-house, erected by Mr. Ketcham for the use of himself and the entertainment of friends who visit the farm. It is adorned with pictures of both living and dead celebrities of the trotting turf, and on the corner of one of these I placed my card, subscribed, "A visitor from California to the former home of the Monarch of the Homestretch, and the present, and possibly future, home of the champion of the trotting turf, the great Cresceus."

As I grasped the young man's hand, and thanked him for his courtesies, I again turned to take a last farewell look at the resting-place of one who in his time figured so prominently in turf history, a name immortalized amongst those whose good fortune it has been to possess any of his descendants, in either the male or female line; for there is not a farm in the whole length and breadth of this great land that has not sought to procure hoth.

And now, having satisfied my desire to see the last resting-place of the old champion, and the birthplace and home of the present champion, I name this as one of the most pleasant stopping-places on my journey, one long to be remembered and cherished.

The Old College Rapidly Growing.

Among the institutional landmarks of San Francisco, none is more conspicuous than Heald's Business College; none has had a more steady and substantial growth. For nearly four decades it has been the leading commercial school on this side of the continent. It has set the standard and other schools have followed as nearly as possible. In the field of commercial education Heald's stands out as prominently as do the two California universities in higher education. It has won this status by hard, conscientious effort to provide for the masses a practical, wage-earning education, and the thousands of grateful workers of the alumni body, who can attest the value of a sound business education, prove how well the college has wrought.

In more recent years the college has enlarged the scope of its work in practical education. In the early 90's, schools of engineering were established and made co-ordinate departments with the commercial departments. The courses in civil, electrical and mining engineering prepare young men for active work in these semi-professional lines. These departments are thoroughly equipped with the modern appliances and instruments and the student is required to do actual work in shop and field.

Prof. E. P. Heald, the founder of the college is still at the head of the institution and spends most of his time at his desk. He is a great lover of horses as is well known and makes frequent Saturday trips to his ranches to be among them and to recuperate.

Kewanna 17,149 at National City.

This handsome son of Sealskin Wilkes will make the season of 1902 at Sweetwater track, National City, at $25. He is a perfect model of a sire, a blood bay, fifteen hands and three inches high and weighs 1160 pounds. He is by a producing son of George Wilkes, his dam is by a producing son of Almont 33, and his second dam by George Wilkes. Mr. James C. Wallace purchased this horse in the East this year, having fallen in love with his great beauty, natural speed and splendid blood lines, and knowing he would be a very valuable addition to the breeding ranks of California. He should get a large patronage for Kewanna.

An old Maryland colored man was summoned to court by the controversy over the ownership of a mule. "Who bought the mule?" demanded the judge.

"Clem Smif en Ah each hought half oh him, sah," responded the old man.

"Where is Smith now?"

"He ain't nehbeh cum down yit, sah. He went to curry his half when his half wuz in had humor. Now, Clem's chillun wants to get deh fatheh's half away from my half en deh half am dech half—"

"Stop!" roared the judge. "Dismiss the case."—Chicago News.

C. F. Bunch writes from San Jose under date of December 15th as follows: "I claim the name of 'Marconi' for black colt sired by Boodle 2:12½, dam Much Better 2:07½, hoping that he may be as great a success as a trotter as his namesake is as an inventor." Mr. Bunch has selected a good name for a good colt and we hope that the man Marconi may send a wireless telegram to the world some day that "Farmer" Bunch of San Jose has driven the horse Marconi a mile in two minutes.

It has long been an axiom that the place in San Francisco to find visiting stock breeders and horsemen from all parts of the Pacific Coast and the East, is at the Russ House. This hotel has recently been entirely refurbished and remodeled at a cost of $85,000, and while the prices are moderate, the very highest standard is maintained. We ask every reader of this paper to read the advertisement of this hostelry in this issue.

wealth and influence putting their shoulder to the wheel, it looks as if sport on the trotting turf would be of a higher character than ever before in the first years of the new century.

The owner of Anaconda 2:01½ says his pacer next season will equal Star Pointer's record of 1:59½. The same prediction could as reasonably be made of Dan Patch, Prince Alert, Auduhon Boy, Shadow Chimes and a few others of the extremely fast brigade.

Captain Haff 2:27½, brother to Nico 2:08½ by Arion, has been bought by James Golden, of Boston.

THE HORSE OF BEAUTY AND UTILITY.

BY BELLFOUNDER.

To the majority of horse breeders on this western shore of America, it would sound almost sacrilegious to say the highest type of the horse can be found in any other breed than the thoroughbred, while a very large minority would very likely select the ideal American trotter, if there be such a thing, as the acme of the perfect equine type. To me, however, the horse that draws the carriage through the park, the animal whose form is moulded on the Hackney plan, be he of that blood or any other, is the ideal, and I believe I have the majority of artists, poets and painters on my side. The greatest of all poets describes his ideal horse as follows:

"Round-hoof'd, short-jointed, fetlocks shag and long,
Broad breast, full eye, small head and nostril wide,
High crest, short ears, straight legs and passing strong,
Thin mane, thick tail, broad buttock, tender hide;
Look, what a horse should have he did not lack,
Save a proud rider on so proud a hack."

The standard set by the immortal bard exists to-day and is in unlimited demand by those who desire to mount "so proud a back," or to ride for pleasure in park or on country road. There is but one exception to the rules laid down by Shakespeare: "Fetlocks shag and long" are now tabooed, and the clipper is run over that part of the horse's anatomy leaving the outlines of the ankles clean cut.

It is this type of horse that Mr. John Parrott is trying to produce at the Baywood Stud near San matings have been made. Since the establishment of the American trotting family of horses, speed and endurance have been the chief acquirements. Mr. Parrott is trying to unite these best qualities of the two breeds. Although the Baywood Stud is a comparatively recent venture in the breeding ranks, there is already a demand for its finished products that it is unable to fully supply. Many prize winning animals at western and eastern horse shows have come from its stables and the single horses and pairs of Baywood Stud are sold annually at prices that average four figures.

The champion Hackney stallion at the recent New York Horse Show was Robin Adair II, a son of Rufus, sire of Green's Rufus.

Few stallions have more wins to their credit than Green's Rufus. He first entered the show ring as a weanling in 1891 and up to the present time has won eighteen first prizes, including two championships and one special prize as follows:

- 1891—First, Syracuse, New York.
- 1893—First, New York, Open Air Show (2 years).
- 1893—Special Prize, same show (under 15 hands).
- 1893—First, White Plains, New York (2 years).
- 1893—First, same show (under 15 hands).
- 1893—First, New York National Show, Madison Square (Junior Champion).
- 1893—First, same show (2 years).
- 1894—First, San Francisco (3 years).
- 1894—First, San Francisco (Champion Class).
- 1895—First, San Francisco (Stallion and get).
- 1895—First, San Francisco (4 years or over).
- 1896—First, San Francisco (Stallion and get).
- 1896—First, San Francisco (4 years or over).
- 1896—First, Burlingame Open Air Show.
- 1898—First, San Mateo County Open Air Show (Stallion and get).
- 1898—First, same show (4 years or over).
- 1899—First, Los Angeles, California (3 years or over).
- 1900—Two First in breeding classes.

Imported Hackney Stallion GREEN'S RUFUS, 63 (4291).

Mateo, and that he is succeeding in his laudable endeavor is shown by the photo-engraving that adorns the illuminated cover of this journal. The horses are "Cockade" and "Crimoline" and are not only a very handsome, but an almost perfectly mannered pair.

Recognizing the fact that the only breed of horses in the world that approaches as a breed the standard and type desired is the Hackney, Mr. Parrott some years ago purchased the prize winning stallion imp. Green's Rufus; and believing further that trotting bred mares of proper conformation and disposition when obtainable would when mated with the high acting Rufus produce the desired animal with fair uniformity and that the produce would have more vim, vigor and stamina than the pure bred Hackney, he has brought to the court of Rufus many choice matrons of trotting blood.

As has been said of Mr. Parrott's venture: "Here, then, is the interesting problem needing, it would seem, elucidation only, as to how best to breed all styles and varieties of horses necessary for what may be termed actual domestic uses, as well as for purposes of high speed. That the Hackney has both speed and endurance has been conclusively proved many times without number. His history shows that the same wells have been visited to supply his characteristics as have been used to supply the avenues of our greatest trotting speed. In an outcross back to trotting mares of high representatives of the Hackney type the results could not fail to be beneficial as helping to further develop the highest type of road horse—the horse for all styles and kinds of domestic work, strongly imbued with the two greatest requisites—speed and endurance."

During the many years of Hackney breeding in Europe style and conformation have been the two characteristics most desired and to achieve which

Sale of M. M. Potter's Horses.

LOS ANGELES, December 19.—About 400 horsemen attended the closing-out sale of the horses of Milo M. Potter's stable at Agricultural Park to-day. Fair prices were realized. Following horses brought the highest prices:

Sweetheart, b f, 2, Bashaw-Wayside; E. T. Earl, Los Angeles, $1500.
Sister, b m, McKinney-Antis; E. T. Earl, $1150.
Sister's Baby, b f, Sky Pointer-Sister; W. N. Rourke, San Bernardino, $750.
Leonore McKinney, h f, McKinney-Leonore; W. N. Rourke, $305.
Sweet Marie, h m, McKinney-Lady Rivers; William Garland, Los Angeles, $3150.
Bessie Holly, h f, Wildnut-American Girl; Mr. Taylor, New York, $150.
Maud McKinney, br m, McKinney-Maud; C. A. Sumner, Los Angeles, $440.
Kiss Me, br f, Zolock-Piney; L. J. Christopher, Los Angeles, $250.
Jessie Del, br f, Zolock-Colton Maid; B. Duncan, Los Angeles, $230.

Several others brought prices ranging down to $85. Thirty-five head brought a total of $12,770, an average of $365 each. Stable trappings, including harness, saddles, sulkies, boots and wagons, sold for about $1300. This, added to the $12,700 realized from the sale of the horses, makes a total of $14,070 as a result of the auction.

Santa Rosa Stock Farm suffered a heavy loss last Saturday by the death of the great mare Janice 2:08½, that succumbed to pneumonia after an illness of two weeks. Janice was five years old and one of the greatest trotting mares in America. It was the opinion of horsemen generally that 2:05 or better would be her mark next year. Janice was bred by H. W. Meek of Haywards and was by his horse, Wm. Harold 2:13½.

The prices received at the Fasig-Tipton sale for Antezella 2:10½ that brought $6700, and Sally Simpson 2:11½ that sold for $2150, indicate that the prejudice against the close thoroughbred cross in a trotter has pretty nearly "died out."

Eulah Mac's and Italia's Winnings.

SACRAMENTO, Dec. 16, 1901.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—In your issue of December 14th, the value of the Occident Stake for 1901 was $2595, and Italia, the winner, received first money $1717, and third money $219.50, her total winnings being $1936.50, in place of $1536.50, as given by you. In 1900 the Stake was won by Eulah Mac and was worth $2230. If you can, kindly correct the figures you published, and oblige. Yours respectfully,

GEO. W. JACKSON.
Sec'y State Ag. Society.

We are pleased to publish the above. Our mistake was made by failing to add to the amount paid into the stake the sum of $400 in each instance which is added by the State Association. The conditions of the stake originally read: "The Occident Cup, of the value of $400, to be added." Instead of the cup the coin is given which makes the winnings that much larger.

Cresceus Trots in 2:07 1-4.

In his effort to lower the Los Angeles track record last Saturday, Cresceus 2:02½, failed, but he trotted a splendid mile. It was a rather cold day and a wind blew up the home stretch. The quarters were in 32½, 30½, 32½ and 32½. The Albert W. stallion, Neerut 2:12½, also attempted to lower his record during the day, but 2:16½ was the best he could do. There were two special races on the card for purses of $200 each. Coeur de Lion won the pace in straight heats, best time 2:14½. The trot was won by Maggie McKinney in straight order, best time 2:20½. There was a large attendance. The meeting was managed by Mr. Freeman G. Teed who conducted it in a manner to the full.

Those who consider a carriage horse too old to buy at the age of ten may be shocked to learn that the combined age of three of the winners of championship ribbons at the National Horse Show this year is something like fifty years. Red Cloud, the heavy weight champion, is known to be nearly twenty years old. Lord Brilliant and Lord Golden, winners of the championships for pairs, are both old horses, having been kept in the stud several years before they were fitted for the show ring. Lord Brilliant is believed to be about seventeen, while Lord Golden is fourteen years old.

The value of the horse stock exported from the United States in the year 1900 amounts in round numbers to $7,500,000 (seven and one-half millions).

THE BANE OF OUR TURF.

Excessive Two-Year-Old Racing—Effect on the Thoroughbreds of the Future—Reforms that Need Immediate Attention.

BY RALPH B. TOZER.

More millions of money are invested in the thoroughbred breeding industry of California than in any manufacturing business carried on within the confines of the Golden State, barring, perhaps, that of ship-building. Yet what an appalling lack of knowledge of the elements that will bring success is manifest amongst the breeders of this glorious commonwealth, so aptly termed "horse paradise!"

Looking backward, a fair-minded person can not but admit that retrogression instead of progression has taken place in the business of breeding thoroughbreds, as far as this state is concerned. Where are the equals of our "world beaters" of years ago, horses that gave the Golden State fame as a breeding-ground without a counterpart in the known world? Why is it that there has not come forth to do battle and to spread the fame of California during the past half-dozen years such thoroughbreds as Tournament, Racine, Rey El Santa Anita, Volante, Santa Ana, Lucky B., Emperor of Norfolk, Homer, Sir Walter, El Rio Rey, and Yo Tambien? We rear twice the number of thoroughbreds in this State that we did fifteen years ago; yet the names of such California celebrities of the turf are not upon the tongues of lovers of a good race-horse as at the period mentioned. Surely the character of the land and the water under the earth has not changed in that time. In other words, our breeders should be just as capable of putting a high-class race-horse upon the track in these days as in the years when the performances of gallopers from this section set the country afire with the glory of their performances.

E. J. Baldwin, with the flyers of his own breeding from Santa Anita, used to begin his campaign on the other side of the Rockies, at Louisville, in May, and so far advanced were his youngsters, through being reared and trained in this salubrious climate, free from the rigors of a freezing winter, that nearly every two-year-old stake hung up in the middle west, where his youngsters were competitors, was captured scarcely without an effort. And, when one considers that Lucky B. won the Louisville cup three years in succession, and that Baldwin's horses finished first in the rich American Derby thrice, and on two occasions were close seconds, and that in these days our good "stayers" are few and far between, one begins to study the reason for all this.

In my opinion, the state of affairs spoken of can be attributed to excessive two-year-old racing, in a large measure, and the breed of race-horses will continue to retrograde unless the governing turf bodies of the country remedy the evil. I would be in favor of having no racing of two-year-olds whatever; but as so many men are making racing a "business," and have such a desire for quick returns, doubtless this plan would meet with strong opposition, precluding it from ever becoming a law. But it is quite among the possibilities that the turf Solons will make it unlawful to race a horse until September of its two-year-old form, and, this accomplished, it will not be so hard to do away with two-year-old racing altogether.

In the days of the famous Eclipse, owned by Captain O'Kelly, horses were not often raced until they were five years of age; the weights were 165 pounds, and the distance negotiated in races was seldom less than two miles, oftener four. A horse is not thoroughly matured until it is four years of age, and therefore this racing of "wealy" two-year-olds (sometimes they are not twenty-four months old when they are sent to the post) can but result in furnishing a breed of cripples, that will last, as really useful racers, on an average about one and one-half seasons. There are so many examples on record of what wonderful things can be done with horses that are not raced as two-year-olds, and so many instances of phenomenal running as two-year-olds and failure to come to the post altogether after that, or if they did come to a race, make such a bad showing that the curse of excessive two-year-old racing is as apparent as the sun at noontime on a cloudless day!

I will just recall a few of the many horses that were not raced as two-year-olds that achieved great fame as racers: Eclipse (O'Kelly's), Fearnought, Goldfinder, Doncaster (winner of the Derby in England), Sultan (sire of Glencoe), Bendigo (the great Irish horse), Irish Birdcatcher, Gladiator (second to Bay Middleton in the Derby and sire of many great winners in France, and of Queen Mary, dam of ten winners in England), King Lud (winner of the Cambridgeshire, Shrewsbury, and Newport cups, etc.), the great Longfellow, King Alfonso, imp. Glencoe (winner Ascot cup, 2,000 guineas, Goodwood cup, and a great sire), American Eclipse (never beaten), imp. Monarch (never beaten), Eolus (great racer and sire), Boston (winner of forty races, thirty of four-mile heats), Norfolk (unbeaten), Lexington (practically undefeated), Powhattan, Fidgetton (beaten but once), Monarque (sire of the wonderful triple crown winner, Gladiateur), Whisper, Wanderer, Tom Ochiltree, Ten Broeck, Monarchist, the great French horses Vermont, Vertugadin, Tenchreux (in filly, winner of the Grand Prix de Paris), and Little Dipper, the Melbourne cup winners of 1897 and 1898 (Gaulus and The Gaffer, Prodigal (winning races at twenty-five years of age), and Hickory Jim (a winner at twenty years).

Frontin, the wonderful French horse, who defeated St. Blaise for the French Derby, ran but one race as a two-year-old; Petrarch, winner of the 2,000 guineas, and St. Leger, appeared once only as a youngster, as did the great French racers, Boiard, Ruy Blas, Le Petit Corporal, and Perplexe, the great Irish horse Kyrle Daly, and the phenomenal American racer Leonatus, winner of the Kentucky Derby and nine other stakes, undefeated as a three-year-old. Verneuil (winner of the Ascot cup, gold vase, and Alexandra plate on Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday of one week), and Dollar, also bred in France, ran but two races at two years of age, as did Springbok, Grinstead, and Day Star in this country; while Ormonde, Isonomy, Silvio, and Stockwell, among the most famous of English horses, appeared but thrice in public as two-year-olds, as also did our turf kings Enquirer, Salvator, and Hanover. All of which goes to show what can be accomplished with a good horse, if allowed to mature without being raced much, if any.

And the same applies to stud matrons. It is a peculiar fact that the most famous brood mares of the world were raced little, and sometimes not at all. Penelope, Queen Mary, and Cinizelli were never campaigned, I believe. Pocahontas ran on seven occasions, was never better than third, and went to the stud early, becoming the dam of Stockwell, Rataplan, Knight of Kars, Knight of St. Patrick, King Tom, and Araucaria. Stockwell won the 2,000 guineas, St. Leger, Racing, Great Yorkshire, and Grand Duke Michael stakes as a three-year-old and The Whip as a five-year-old, and at the stud was the most wonderful horse ever known, St. Simon, a present-day sire, alone excelling him at siring classic stake-winners. Rataplan won forty-two races, nearly all stakes. Knight of Kars, Knight of St. Patrick, and King Tom were good winners and excellent sires, and Araucaria, which won but one race, proved the mother of Stephanotis, winner of seven high-class races as a two-year-old; Wellingtonia, a stake-winner and sire of note; Camelia, winner of the 1,000 guineas, and dead beat for the Oaks; Cbamant, winner Middle Park Plate, Dewhurst Plate, 2,000 guineas, etc.; Dash, a stake-winner; and Rayon d'Or, winner of the St. Leger, Prince of Wales, Rous Memorial, St. James Palace, Levant, Clearwell, Champion Stakes, etc., and $121,040. Queen Mary met with an accident, and was never raced; yet she gave to the world ten great winners, including Blink Bonny, winner of the Derby and Oaks, and the most famous sire in America; Bonnie Scotland, second in the St. Leger, and a stake-winner. And, by the way, Bonnie Scotland was raced less than half a dozen times in his life.

Marion, by Malcolm, by most persons regarded as the greatest mother of high-class winners ever known in any country, ran but once, and, meeting with an accident which caused her to be thrown out of training, went to the stud young. Belle Knight, a good second to Marion in these later days, with nine winners to her credit, was never raced. Fancy Jane, mother of Miss Woodford and Belle of Runnymede, was a rank failure as a racer, and retired to the stud at an early age. Imp. Janet N., dam of Dolce, Bellicoso, Wandering Nun, and Crescendo, never sported silk. The immortal Levity, mother of Ruric, Lightsome, Lever, etc., was never known as a racer. The same can be said of Bourbon Belle (dam of Hanover, Houston, Tuscola, etc.), imp. Fairy Rose, Play Toy, imp. Flirt, Florida, Mistake, and imp. Cinderella, latter dam of Foreigner, Ferrier, Handsome, Hastings, Glenheim, and Plaudit.

Betsey Malone, Reel, Nina, Balloon, Magenta, Salina, and Thora are the only American turf queens to reproduce themselves during a period of 100 years, and most of these went to the stud at either four or five years of age. Not one of the number was raced excessively as a two-year-old; in fact, up to Thora's time, few races were given for thoroughbreds of such tender age, and these only in the fall. While these turf queens reproduced themselves, with the exception of Reel, Balloon, and Thora, they threw but one performer in anything approaching the champion class. Reel, sent to the stud when five years old, was the mother of Le Compté (the only horse that ever made Lexington extend himself), Priorella, a great stake-winner in England; Starke, also a stake-winner in England; Fanny Wells, and War Dance. Balloon gave to the world True Blue and The Banshee, while Thora was the mother of Yorkville Belle, Don Alonzo, and other good ones.

A peculiar feature about Marion's foals was that, in 1879, 1881, 1883, 1885, 1887, 1889, and 1891, she produced her best turf performers, viz., Duchess of Norfolk, Prince of Norfolk, King of Norfolk, Emperor of Norfolk, El Rio Rey, Yo Tambien, and Yo El Rey. In 1878 she foaled Duke of Norfolk; 1880, slipped foal; 1882, no report; 1884, Vera; 1886, The Czar (died after winning three good races); 1888, Rey del Reyes; 1890, slipped foal; and in 1892, Rey del Sierras. With the exception of The Czar, those foaled on the even dates were not considered anywhere near the equals of those that first saw the light in 1879, 1881, etc. This makes one think well of the plan of Lord Falmouth, the most successful breeder of race-horses England has ever known. That plan was to only use his mares for breeding purposes every other year. He also adhered to the scheme of never racing a mare to be used at the stud after her four-year-old form. She would then have become fully matured, and, not raced to excess any one season, would leave the turf in full possession of all the vital force that goes to make a successful mother of race-horses. Again, should she be bred to a bad-tempered or unsound horse twice or thrice in succession, the mare would not, bred only in alternate years, be likely to give to the world foals having the faults of the sire intensified through "saturation," as was so clearly proven to be the case by the late C. Bruce Lowe. With a year's rest after giving birth to a foal, a mare would produce much stronger offspring, and thus a better breed of race-horses would result in a very few years' time. In the human race, have you ever noticed that a young woman who gives birth to children year after year, becomes, in a few years, careworn-looking, and appears many years older than she really is? or, if she should happen to thrive, her offspring become puny, and a heavy care on the parents? What will apply to the human race will in all probability apply to thoroughbred horses.

Now, as to the reason for the slump of the Californian thoroughbreds as racing machines, spoken of in the early part of this article. When E. J. Baldwin sent the horses of his own breeding across the Rockies, and created such a furor through their achievements on the turf, there was good reason for their proving their excellence. It is granted, I believe, that the Californian two-year-old has about six months' advantage, through climatic conditions, over the thoroughbreds of Kentucky, Tennessee, Illinois, New York, New Jersey, or Virginia. No finer stock farm than Santa Anita is to be found in any part of the world, if, indeed, its equal. If memory serves me, Mr. Baldwin's first crop of two-year-olds came out to race in the middle west about 1882. He owned Grinstead and Rutherford, and a lot of Glenelg mares, a few by Virgil, Monday, Norfolk, and Monarchist. Now, Grinstead (by Gilroy, sister to Ruric, second dam the great Levity) was a superior race-horse, that had not been excessively raced, and of Rutherford (a brother to Spendthrift, Fellowcraft, and Miser, and a brother in blood to Wildidle); the same could be said of the mares; many had not raced at all, and those that had sported silk had not been "killed off" in their infancy. In short, the era when the Baldwin mares were upon the turf was not the era of the black frost of excessive two-year-old racing that afterward came to blight the budding flowers of turfdom. Therefore, with stallions and mares in full possession of all the strength and power that goes with well-nourished youth, reared in the grandest climate known, and handled by the most skillful and experienced men that money could secure, is it to be wondered at that the fame of California as the home of fleet and game thoroughbreds spread throughout the world?

That fame brought men like J. B. Haggin and Leland Stanford into the breeders' fold, and they went in on a large scale, too. Their horses divided honors with those of Baldwin, who had pioneered the way, and California began to be regarded as a worthy rival of Kentucky and Tennessee in the line of breeding.

The mares originally used by these breeders threw stake-winner after stake-winner; but they are old now, and the stud matrons that have taken their places have felt the touch of the black frost of excessive two-year-old racing. There can be but one result when a thoroughbred is sent to the post before it is barely twenty-four months old, and kept going until nature forces a halt. The cripple is at once sent to the stud, and, without having had time enough to evolve from an athlete to a substantial stud animal, is put to breeding. What can you expect, if you just think the matter over? Why, a race of weaklings that would not be a credit to any section. Once in a while there will be a good performer; but, upon investigation, you will find it is from some old mare, that was not raced much in her young days, or from some young mare that met with an accident, which kept her off the racing list, and saved her from the fate of being "raced off her legs," as old trainers put it.

I would like to see the governing turf bodies of America, at an early date, take up this question of whether it is or is not better to race two-year-olds; and I am satisfied that, if they sift the matter to the bottom, they will see that it is this early and excessive racing of thoroughbred horses that is blighting the breed; will see that the proportion of young cripples is at least 100 per cent greater than it was even ten years ago; that the tendency of the thoroughbred of the present is to sprint, and not "stay"; and that, altogether, the racers of this continent are going backward instead of forward. Racing associations everywhere are stated to have for their principal object the "improvement of the breed of race-horses." Under the present system this should be changed to "extinguishment of the breed of race-horses."

Then, after the law-makers of the American turf had done the right thing as to two-year-old racing, on the lines I have set forth, I would like to see America's most prominent breeder, J. B. Haggin, possessor of millions of money and more famous horses than any man in the world, adopt Lord Falmouth's plan of only breeding his mares in alternate years, and not using any mare that had raced beyond her four-year-old form. If this should come about—Mr. Haggin is certainly past the point where he has to make the stock farm pay a certain sum every year—it is my firm belief that, within six years' time, Californians would again have the honor of breeding the fleetest and stoutest thoroughbred racers in all the world, which honor, by reason of the possession of unsurpassed climatic conditions and lands of such varied character, calculated to develop to its fullest every muscle in a horse, should never have been taken away, would never have been lost but for the greed of men who desired immediate returns upon their investments, even at the sacrifice of "man's noblest friend, the horse." The turf of the far east, however, never had among its patrons so many men of wealth and high position as at present, and when gentlemen of the Whitney, Belmont, and Vanderbilt stamp take such an active interest in the turf affairs of America as they do, we can look for many lasting reforms to be made, and the evolution of many plans which will place this country ahead of even England and Australia in the line of racing, which is saying a good deal, too. With the population, the wealth, and the enterprise, why should we take a rear seat in the racing amphitheater?

A FAMOUS TRAINING TRACK.

Pleasanton! What a flood of memory comes o'er the mind as one repeats the name. What a line of champions parade before the vision. What an array of speed at trot and pace, such as no other training ground in America can boast. There comes Director 2:17, champion of his day, and founder here at this track of the greatest family of champions that ever lived: Directum 2:05½, champion trotting stallion of the world from that day in October, 1893, at Nashville, until the great Cresceus dethroned him at Hartford, in September of last year, by trotting a mile in 2:04½; Direct 2:05½ and his wonderful son Directly 2:03½, who holds and will hold for years the two year old champion record of 2:07½; Flying Jib 2:04, whose mile in 1:58½ to wagon with running mate has never been equalled; Klatawah 2:05½ as a three year old, a world's record; Searchlight 2:03½, one of the handsomest and gamest stallions that ever wore harness; Anaconda 2:01½, whose triumphs through the Grand Circuit are not yet ended, and who holds the record for winning now for about two hundred horses. Probably eighty horses are at work there now, among those having strings at work being Mr. Juan Gallegos of Mission San Jose, Ed Lafferty, Samuel Gamble, Geo. H. Kelly, Bert Webster with Chas. Griffiths Stables, Geo. A. Davis, James Sutherland, J. M. Alvise and others.

Here was trained and can still be seen Mr. Geo. A. Davis's good stallion, Rey Direct 2:10, a successful race horse and a wonderfully successful sire. Anzella 2:10½, the fastest mare on the circuit last year is now stabled at this track and is visited almost daily by admiring horsemen and many offers have been made for her. One of the most enthusiastic of the residents of this section, a gentleman who has had many horses trained here is Mr. C. L. Crellin, one of the former owners of the great Searchlight 2:03½ and a partner of the late Thos. Keating. But a short distance from Pleasanton is Mr. Crellin's home, the famous Ruhy Hill Vineyard where wines of world wide fame are made.

The corporation owning the property proposes to keep the track in as perfect condition as possible and to that end has made Mr. James Sutherland the superintendent. Stalls will be rented at most reasonable rates and those who contemplate training horses this winter will find Pleasanton has more advantages than any place in California. The late lamented Thos. Keating the fastest three heat race ever paced; Lena N. 2:05½, the champion pacing mare of her year; Gold Leaf 2:11, champion three year old of her time; Cricket 2:10, the fastest mare to high wheels; Azote 2:04½, champion trotting gelding of the world until last year; Alix 2:03½, holder of the world's record until dethroned by Cresceus, and still holder of the record for mares; Little Albert 2:10, Dione 2:07½, Margaret S 2:12 and a host of others that it would take pages to name.

The very fact that so many holders of world's records have received their training on the Pleasanton track, leads to inquiry as to what causes have led to such a list of record breakers. There is an answer always ready by the trainer which he divides into three clauses: First the soil, second the climate and third the feed.

The soil on which the Pleasanton track is built is beyond any question the nearest perfection of any in the world that has thus far been discovered and utilized for a training track. It is a sediment formed by the overflowing in years past of the creek that meanders through the valley where the track is located. It is a sort of sandy clay that is best in the rainy season for training purposes, but which can be placed in perfect condition at any time during the driest summer season by the use of the sprinkling cart. During the days when Monroe Salisbury owned the property which was then known as the Pleasanton Stock Farm, the track was not a full mile and was a little irregular in shape, but under the present management it has been surveyed and improved until now it is the regulation mile, with turns thrown up to the proper pitch and is just about perfection for training. Within a few hours after the heaviest rain the track is fit to work on and there has never yet been a time that horses could not be speeded over it with safety when the sun was shining. One has only to walk around this famous training course to be convinced of the adaptability of the soil to the uses to which it has been devoted. The print made by the shoe is as clear cut as an impression in wax and there is a cushion that prevents any sudden jar to tendons, bones or muscles.

Of the climate of Pleasanton many lines have been written, but after all have sung its praises and related its wonderful invigorating and tonic effects, the Eastern sojourner can truthfully say with the famous Queen of old "The half has not been told me," as there are more bright, sunny and balmy days at Pleasanton than at any other point in California within the same radius of San Francisco. Out of three hundred and sixty-five days in the year more than three hundred are such as the trainer of horses delights in, and it is no wonder they are drawn to Pleasanton as by a magnet as soon as the racing season ends in the fall.

Pleasanton hay is world renowned. Mr. Salisbury and Mr. Keating took it East to feed their champions in their famous campaigns, and many were the times antagonists would beg of them a few feeds for their horses, remarking that conditions were not equal so long as they had the advantage of feeding the Pleasanton product. In later years the fame of the Pleasanton hay has spread, until such horses as Cresceus 2:02½ and many others now make their daily meals on it, and a few tons of this nutritious fodder accompanies the champion in all his travels. As astute and practical a trainer as Mr. E. Corrigan ships carloads of it as far as England at a cost, landed there, of nearly fifty dollars per ton. It comes high, but he must have it, as he knows it to be the best that grows.

The Pleasanton Training Track is now owned by a corporation of which Mr. H. F. Anderson is President and Mr. W. H. Donahue, of the firm of Harris & Donahue, Pleasanton, is Secretary and Manager. There were built last year about two hundred new stalls and there is accommodation of the very best always trained there, and he went East, met the best on the Grand Circuit and always got the money. The famous Keating & Crellin stable commenced its first work at Pleasanton, where Mr. C. L. Crellin resides.

Within a mile of the Pleasanton track Mr. G. A. Davis has bred his wonderful little horse Rey Direct and he may be seen at any time driving this stallion or the world famous Flying Jib 2:04 on the road or the track.

Two Crosses to Green Mountain Maid.

A stallion with two crosses of Hambletonian 10 and two of Green Mountain Maid, one through the mighty Electioneer and the other through Elaine 2:20, dam of four in the list, can be called scientifically bred, and when it is further stated that he has a race record of 2:12½, has one son with a race record of 2:12½ and another with a race record of 2:15 that is the fastest four year old gelding of 1901, scientific breeding can in this instance be said to be a demonstrated fact.

Iran Alto's blood lines are such that even had he not already proved himself a race horse and a sire of extreme racing speed, he would reasonably be expected to do so. His sire, Palo Alto 2:08½, one of the greatest race trotters ever bred, is the holder of the world's stallion record to high wheel sulky, and the sire of Iran Alto 2:12½, Pasote 2:13, Palita 2:16, Rio Alto 2:16½, Palatine 2:18, Palon 2:18½, Cressida 2:18½, Alla 2:21½, Fillmore 2:21½, Erastus C. 2:22, Palo Belle 2:24½ and Avena 2:27, although he left but about forty foals all told, having died at any early age and before being actually placed in the stud. Palo Alto 2:08½, as all horsemen know, was Senator Stanford's favorite stallion as he was bred on the lines laid down by him to improve the breed of trotters, and which has been such a marvelous success. Palo Alto's sire, Electioneer, has 166 in the 2:30 list, and is the leading progenitor of extreme trotting speed in the world, his son Chimes being sire of the world's champion gelding, The Ahhot 2:03½. Of Electioneer it is not necessary to say much. No other sire has approached him in the number of standard trotters, and his family holds more world's records than that of any other stallion.

The dam of Palo Alto was the thoroughbred mare Dame Winnie, dam of Palo Alto 2:08½, Paola 2:18, Altivo 2:18½, Big Jim 2:23½ and Gertrude Russell 2:23½. Dame Winnie was by Planet out of Liz Mardis by imported Glencoe, her next dam being Fannie G. by imp. Margrave, the first mare to run a mile so fast as 1:45 in America, and the grandam of Alma Mater the wonderful broodmare with eight in the list, and dam of those great speed producers Alcantara 2:23, sire of 142, Alcyone 2:27, sire of 60, Allandorf 2:17½, sire of 27, Alfonso 2:29½, sire of 12 in 2:30 and several other producing sons and daughters. Palo Alto's breeding is rich in blood that produces speed—Electioneer, the leading sire of trotters, and thoroughbred blood that has produced extreme speed at both running and trotting gaits.

The dam of Iran Alto is that wonderful mare Elaine 2:20 by Messenger Duroc. Elaine was the world's champion three year old of 1877, the record being 2:23½. She was the world's four year old champion next year when she reduced her mark to 2:24, and afterwards took a mark of 2:20. She is the dam of Norlaine that took the world's champion yearling record of 2:31½ in 1887, of Iran Alto 2:12½, of Palatine, three year old record 2:18, of Anselma 2:29½, and also of Elsie, the dam of Palita, two year old record 2:16, Rio Alto, three year old record 2:16½, Novelist, two year old record 2:27, Mary Osborne, yearling record 2:37, three year old record 2:28½, and Salvini 2:30.

The second dam of Iran Alto is the famous Green Mountain Maid, dam of Elaine 2:20, Prospero 2:20, Elesta 2:20½, Dame Trot 2:22, Elina 2:24½, Mansfield 2:26, Storm 2:26½, Lancelot 2:28½, Antonio 2:28½, Miranda 2:31, and of Electioneer 125, the greatest of trotting sires. It will be noticed that Iran Alto gets two crosses of Green Mountain Maid and two of Hambletonian 10.

Of Iran Alto's produce just four have been trained. Of these Dr. Frasse 2:12½, one of the greatest bulldog trotters ever seen on this Coast, was the result of Iran Alto's only service as a two year old when he was bred to Lynda Wilkes. The next year, as a three year old, he served two mares, one of them Lynda Wilkes and she produced Dr. Frasse's Sister 2:25½, that took her record as a three year old and was second in the Occident and won the Stanford Stake that year. As a four year old five of the farm's mares were bred to Iran Alto and five foals resulted, two of them having been trained—Vendome 2:21½ and Thos. R. 2:15, the latter the fastest four year old gelding of 1901. Iran Alto will make the season of 1902 at the Vendome Stock Farm.

SEYMOUR WILKES 2:08 1-2 AND FIVE OF HIS COLTS.

The above photo-engravings are of one of the fastest and gamest stallions ever bred on the Pacific Coast and five of his get—four being three-year-olds and one a two-year-old. He has none that are older. Seymour Wilkes is a model horse, and his colts are remarkable for their size, style and great natural speed. The uniformity with which he stamps his progeny with his own grand qualities is attracting the attention of horse breeders all over the Coast, and his patronage is increasing every year. The Seymour Wilkes are in great demand, three having been sold for $1000 each within the past year. Seymour Wilkes is by Guy Wilkes 2:15, and is the fastest stallion ever sired by that great horse. He is the property of J. M. Gregory of the St. George Stables, 408 Bush street, this city, and will make the season of 1902 at the Cy White Ranch, Lakeville, Cal., in charge of Thos. Roche. His service fee will be $40 for the season, and no stallion in California can be bred to with any greater assurance of getting those three most valuable qualities—size, style and speed.

An Equine Adonis.

That "blood will tell" has been demonstrated beyond the possibility of a doubt by horse breeders, and those of the clan who intend breeding their mares in the coming spring can spend a profitable hour or so in studying the blood lines of Mr. Cbas. Griffith's magnificent horse, Bonnie Direct 2:05, one of the handsomest as well as one of the fastest stallions ever bred in California. His sire, Direct 2:05, we all know. He was a champion of his time, had a champion for a sire, and is now siring a line of champions, among them being Directly 2:03, whose two year old record of 2:07 is still beyond any rival's reach, and the subject of this sketch, Bonnie Direct, whose race record of 2:05 is the fastest ever made by any horse during his first season.

On his dam's side there is also wonderful producing blood. The mare that brought Bonnie Direct into the world is Bon Bon by Simmons. Bon Bon is also the dam of Bonsilene 2:14, a mare of extraordinary beauty, and this daughter of Simmons is considered one of the coming great broodmares of America. Simmons, son of George Wilkes, has sired 93 standard trotters and pacers, among them 29 with records better than 2:15, while his producing daughters have given us Tomboy 2:10, Fereno 2:10, Owyhee 2:11, Bonnie Direct 2:05 and thirty others, while 25 or more of the sons of Simmons have produced nearly seventy that have trotted or paced into the standard list.

The second dam of Bonnie Direct is Bonnie Wilkes 2:29, a daughter of George Wilkes 2:22, and his third dam is Betty Viley by Bob Johnson, a thoroughbred son of Boston. Boston, who sired the great Lexington, was the sire of Jack Hawkios, sire of the grandam of Direct. Bonnie Direct's breeding is worth studying and shows speed producing blood at every point. Two crosses to that wonderful race horse Boston, one each through sire and dam is something no other standard bred horse in America possesses to our knowledge.

When Bonnie Direct was campaigned by the late T. E. Keating through the Grand Circuit of 1900, he returned home the greatest money winner of any horse that crossed the mountains. Nearly eight thousand dollars was the amount won by him and he met and defeated all the best in his class. He won five races, including the Chamber of Commerce Stake at Detroit, which was not only the richest paid event of the year, but had the largest field and was one of the most hotly contested races ever seen on the circuit. He was second once and fourth once. There is an incident of the Detroit race not generally known, except to those who were present. When the horses came out for the fifth heat, and had scored down several times some outsider shouted "go" and about one-half of the drivers thought the word had been given and raced the heat out, Bonnie Direct winning. The judges would not permit the horses to be unhitched or cooled out but sent them up the stretch for another start. It did not trouble Bonnie Direct, however, and his great endurance and gameness returned him a winner again. Thus he actually paced seven heats in the race though the summary shows but six.

While he was not in condition at any time during the present year to race as he should he won a heat in 2:05, equaling his record of last year. Mr. Keating always held that Bonnie Direct had all the qualifications of the two minute horse and should he reach that record this year or next few horsemen who knows him would express surprise.

His great beauty is one of his striking characteristics and few stallions have lived that possessed greater symmetry of form or more quality. He will make the season of 1902 at the celebrated Pleasanton track in charge of Bert Webster. We call especial attention to the advertisement of this horse in our issue this week, and would ask breeders to look over the summary of some of his races there printed.

A Well Known Artisan.

One of the best known men in California amongst the horsemen is Martin O'Dea, of the St. Julien Shoeing Shop, 136 Geary street. Mr. O'Dea does not believe in shifting about, consequently his shop is still in the old place where it has been a familiar and well known resort for the past thirty-five years. In the past all the celebrated track performers feet have been under his supervision—faulty gaits, tender feet and other ailments of the feet have been successfully treated by him. He is still the presiding genius of the shop and is always ready to give his personal attention to all work entrusted to him. Ever on the alert for new ideas he is yet conservative of the good of the old and the individuality of each foot is treated according to habits, conformation and requirements. Mr. O'Dea gives as much attention to preventing possible defects of the foot occurring as to remedy them when out of order. A keen observer and thorough workman whose motto is "perfection," and who never allows any but skilled and trustworthy men in his employ, is characteristic of the man and his shop now as in the past and deservedly so—is the leading establishment of its kind in San Francisco.

Personally, Mr. Martin O'Dea is as well known as any man in California, numbering as he does amongst the drivers and owners, his friends by the hundreds, and to all who enjoy his acquaintance or have business relations with him he is known as the soul of honor as well as an entertaining and genial companion. His son, Martin O'Dea, Jr., who is associated with him in the business, is a close student and keen observer and rare indeed is the case requiring complicated shoeing that he is not qualified to attend to. Give them a call and consult with them before placing your shoeing elsewhere.

The New Memphis Jockey Club has a list of ten stakes advertised in this issue, which close January 7, 1902, as follows: Tennessee Derby for 1903, $3000 added, and Tennessee Oaks for 1903, $1500 added. Eight stakes to be run this spring are: Gaston Hotel Stakes, colts and geldings, $1000 added, four furlongs; Ardelle Stakes, fillies, $1000 added, four furlongs; Memphis Stakes, $1000 added; Gayoso Hotel Stakes, for three year olds, $1000 added; the Montgomery Handicap, $2000 added; the Peabody Hotel Handicap, $1000 added; the Tennessee Brewing Company Stake, selling, $1000 added, and the Cotton Steeplechase Handicap, $1000 added. The last four events are for three year olds and upward.

PAST METHODS AND PRESENT.

BY WM. G. LAYNE.

"The spirit of the times shall teach us speed," is a quotation which is as appropriate to-day as it was when the immortal bard of Avon penned it. Look whichever way we will, we see that everything is being done that humanity can devise to get speed, more speed, for this is a progressive age. Steam and electricity have revolutionized the world, while in every amusement to draw us aside from the daily routine of business life, speed is one of the great desiderata. In yachting, rowing, shooting, as well as racing, everything in the way of weight and bulk is sacrificed, in order that greater speed may be attained.

In running races, the thousands of patrons of this sport never clamor for long-drawn-out contests. Heavily-weighted horses are unknown in the "sport of kings." Dashes of five-eighths of a mile to a mile and a half are the attractions, and the jockeys are children in size and age, compared with the Archers and Fitzpatricks of twenty-five years ago. Heat races are only a reminiscence, and it is an undeniable fact that, within fifteen years, there will be very few of the people living who witnessed the contests over which thousands were wagered in match and heat races, where the greatest excitement amongst all classes, rich and poor, prevailed. For weeks and months previous to these great events the interest taken in them became almost universal. Wherever the few sporting journals of the day had a reader, he considered it an honor and a privilege to proclaim the fact that the champions were to meet for purses which ranged from $1,000 to $15,000 a side. The courses were on turf; the turns were not thrown up. The line of fencing on the inner side was the only guide, and, long before the hour the contestants were to meet, wagons and vehicles of every description, drawn by "bobtail nags" and horses that appeared to come right from the fields to make the day a pleasant one for their happy and exultant drivers, would be seen from break of day on all the roads leading to the course. Saddle horses jostled against men on foot; but, in the expectancy of the days sport, everybody appeared good natured, from the ragged little harefoot urchin running along the road to the ruddy-faced business man in his carriage, who felt that it was indeed a day of relaxation from business cares to see a "hoss race."

The matter of time made in the race seemed immaterial to all. If one horse had more speed and gameness than the other, they did not care if the mile was run in 1:50. They wanted to "see the best hoss win." And it was the duty of every gentleman and every lady to congratulate those who won wagers from them, and in other ways give expression to the thought: "The king is dead. Long live the king."

But how different that great magnet, speed, has drawn the human race into another channel! Horse racing has been reduced to a science, and everything pertaining to it has been rendered secondary to the acquirement of speed. Improved tracks, starting machines, short dashes, and light-weighted, high-priced jockeys are in demand. It is the aim of all breeders, owners, and trainers to break records for speed, and the financial part of the racing game has been changed to meet these conditions, for a horse without speed is valueless.

Speed is also the great aim in betting. No long-drawn-out auction pools are allowable. Bookmakers chalk the odds on a blackboard. The public make their wagers or bets against these figures, get a ticket as a receipt for their money, and walk away to view the races. There is no overnight betting. A quick return for the investment comes in the shape of this ticket, which means that the buyer either wins or loses immediately on the horse he bets on. No time is lost after a race is decided for successful ones to wait for their money.

In light-harness horse racing, greater changes are even more observable. In the days of Hiram Woodruff the sulkies were heavy and clumsily made; leather hoots were unknown; shoeing and balancing trotters and pacers was a crude science, which very few farriers had given an hour's study; the tracks were flat on the turns, and the old high-wheeled sulkies used to slide and rattle around the turns in a manner to make the onlooker feel that it was preferable to sit on the fence than in such dangerous vehicles. The drivers had a habit of "hiking" at each other like a band of Comanche Indians on the warpath. Horses were driven with a "git-thar-Eli" vim that was almost blood curdling. The poor animals, their ribs showing plainly the effects of their severe and inhuman training, were allowed to skip, skive, and hitch, and a handy breaker was a jewel of great value in the estimation of the old-time drivers. After the heat an army of boys and men would be seen following each horse to its stall, or, under some tree, all these attendants were loaded with heavy blankets and water-buckets. The horse was not given a moment's rest; there would be four attendants, one at each leg, hand-rubbing him, and two men on each side scraping off the lather; then the steed was blanketed from ears to tail with at least three pairs of the heaviest kind of blankets that could be procured, a heavy woolen hood was placed on, and then the poor animal was walked until the bell rang for the next heat. This process would be repeated after each heat, and, when the long afternoon's long scoring and racing were ended, the horse was nearer dead than alive. To keep a horse big and strong, as they do nowadays, would mean that he was "fat," and could not possibly go fast while he carried such high flesh.

The feeding problem was different. A horse could not get too much oats. He needed them to make him game and tough. Time was an object, but if a horse could, by any manner of means, win, that was all that was necessary. The driver who earned second money without giving his horse a record was considered an artist in the sulky. Long-drawn-out scoring helped the betting, and to win in straight heats was almost a crime, for the money part of the game was never overlooked in the betting ring or in the sulky. The harnesses worn by the horses were on a par with the suits worn by the drivers. Colored caps were all that were needed to distinguish the men, and numbers on the drivers' arms were never thought of.

When, on that eventful day in August, 1874, Dexter lowered the mark made by Flora Temple, and Robert Bonner, that grand patron of racing, took an interest in the trotting horse of America, what a change was wrought in this entrancing sport! The prices he paid for "fast" horses set every owner working to get a fast one, so that he, Commodore Vanderbilt, or the other New York magnates who drove down the Bloomingdale road, might be attracted, and perhaps purchase the animal. The breeding problem also claimed their attention, and Rysdyk's Hambletonian was the horse that every owner of a good mare wished to get a colt from. American Star, Ethan Allen, and about a dozen others, also came in for a share of patronage.

Then the question of developing the speed of the youngsters set their owners to devising ways and means to accomplish the result. Sulkies, as well as harness, were made lighter; leather boots were substituted for the home-made burlaps; horses were shod lighter, and toe weights were introduced; then Senator Leland Stanford advocated the throwing up of the turns on race-tracks, and at Sacramento had this accomplished, giving his reason therefor based on a scientific as well as a practical basis. New ways of training horses were introduced. The rules of racing were changed, so that the people who came to see speed contests were not worn out by witnessing scoring which would tax the patience of Job. Purses were made larger and entrance fees lower, and for the extremely fast class, and for records against time, large sums were offered. Race and time records were lowered with a regularity that was astonishing. The 2:10 mark was passed; then the pneumatic sulky, the acme of perfection in this line, was introduced. Speed was still the object of the spirit of the times. The two-minute trotter and pacer was what every one wanted, and to get him was, and still is, the aim of every man who owns a stallion or a brood mare. The turf journals, of which there are at least fifty in the United States, besides the amount of space devoted to this industry in all the leading newspapers, keep the horsemen and public generally posted, and whenever a phenomenally-fast "green" horse appears, a half-tone picture of him is at once sought for by the enterprising turf reporters, and its owner acquires a name for horse knowledge he never dreamed of.

With the acquirement of extreme speed came a more careful study of the condition of the animal that has shown a great burst of speed for a short distance. Like a foot-racer, he is gradually prepared for sustaining that flight of speed for an eighth of a mile to a mile, and then to trot or pace heats at this "clip." Feeding, grooming, bedding, stabling, and care of legs and feet, and, in fact, the whole system, is a trade in itself.

No two horses are constituted alike, and the man who has achieved greatness in taking a big string of trotters and pacers, and carrying them through the circuit, winning a part of the money every time he starts, receives a high salary and is considered an authority on training, as he is entitled by his efforts to that honor. He has learned by experience that the demand of associations, as well as the "spirit of the times, has taught him speed," and he does not have time to stop and wonder what the future has in store for him. His sole object in life is to get all the speed out of his horses he can, without endangering them in wind or limb. He has no fear of being run over by rival drivers, for he knows the judges in the stand will protect him and punish all who do not observe the rules of racing. Jobbery is dying out on the trotting tracks, and the confidence of the people, who love to see good, "square" races, is returning. Where there were only a few hundred in attendance on the race-tracks several years ago, there are thousands and tens of thousands to be seen cheering the victors to the echo, and willing and anxious to lend all the assistance in their power to every driver who shows how he can win races by getting all the speed possible out of his horse.

The building of speed tracks in all the large cities continues, and many a famous campaigner has destroyed all signs of lassitude in his or her owner, and sent an electric thrill through his frame, which has proven a tonic that is more pleasant and beneficial than all the medicines that were ever prescribed. The keenest interest of his life is taken in getting all the speed he can out of his pet horse, and he feels it a pleasure beyond measure to invite a friend to share a ride with him over the speed tracks and boulevards. He knows that this exercise will prolong his life and add zest to his labors in the dark and crowded counting-rooms and offices. His cares are forgotten in discussing the merits of his trotter or pacer, and the question of speed is one he delights to ponder over; and when the curtain of night falls, and all is still, he oftentimes wonders if he will ever have the pleasure of owning a two-minute trotter, and how delighted he will be to take the dearest one he loves out for a quiet drive along the shaded roads, and then to turn into the straightaway, and almost fly to the music of the patting feet of the faithful, willing trotter, that seems to take a pleasure in battling against old Father Time for his kind and thoughtful owner and the dear one by his side.

Aptos Stock Farm.

It has fallen to the fortunes of few men to breed two 2:10 trotters, and but two breeders that we can now recall have bred two trotting mares that have taken records in that list. Mr. C. J. Hamlin bred Fantasy 2:06 by Chimes and Nightingale 2:08 by Mambrino King. Mr. A. B. Spreckels of San Francisco bred at that beautiful farm at Aptos, the mares Dione 2:07½ and Hulda 2:08½, and as Mr. Spreckels has always carried on his harness horse breeding entirely for pleasure and not for profit, and has never entered into it in an extensive way, it must be a source of great gratification to him to know that such a proportion of horses with extreme speed have come from his farm.

Mr. Spreckels owns three trotting bred stallions—Dexter Prince, one of the greatest sires of speed; Cupid, a son of Sidney, everyone of whose get that have been raced has a standard record, and Aptos Wilkes, a horse whose get are noted for their grand individuality and substance.

Dexter Prince is the sire of Eleata 2:08½, winner of the M. & M. this year and the largest money winner on the Grand Circuit.

Cupid is the sire of Venus II. 2:11½, Psyche 2:16½ and Lottie Parks 2:16½, the only ones of his get that ever started.

Aptos Wilkes is not yet represented in the list of producing sires, but so many of his get sell for large figures as park horses that his reputation in this line extends across the continent.

Early in the new year there will be twenty-two head of horses taken up to Mr. Spreckels' Aptos Farm half-mile track to be made ready for the Blue Ribbon sale at Cleveland in May, and they will be by the three sires above mentioned, and out of the best broodmares on the farm. When Mr. Spreckels sold the thoroughbred yearlings from his Napa Stock Farm in New York last November the expressed and printed opinions of the New York experts was that they were in better condition than any consignment sold this year. The consignment of trotting bred horses from Aptos will have the same care and attention, and we can predict right now with confidence that the prediction will be fulfilled and no farm in America will ship a better looking lot to Cleveland. Mr. Spreckels has always made quality, substance, beauty, speed and action his aims in breeding trotters and has succeeded better than the majority of breeders, as the proportion of high class horses bred by him proves. When the Cleveland sale opens in May next, Eastern buyers will have the opportunity to judge for themselves of the high quality of the produce of Aptos Farm, and the prices they bid will, we believe, endorse with emphasis all that has been said by us.

Draught Horses at Rio Vista.

California, the home of the trotting horse is also the abode of the draught horse and in no part of the State can better draught horses be found than in the country surrounding Rio Vista. The Montezuma Hills famous as a wheat raising section is recognized by San Francisco draymen to produce the best horses on the Coast.

None but the best stallions stand here. Cyrus Noble, winner of the State Fair premium in 1899 as a two year old and also in 1900 as a three year old, is deserving of special mention. This beautiful, dappled grey, pure bred, Norman Percheron, is a California bred horse sired by Raglan, raised on the Rancho Del Valle at Pleasanton, Alameda Co. Now owned by McCormack Bros. of Rio Vista. This horse served over one hundred mares last season as a four year old, his owners refusing to book any more.

Pointsman Jr., a pure bred Clyde, also made last season here. This horse is also a California bred horse, being raised by G. W. McNear of Petaluma, Sonoma Co. Peter Cook of this place purchased him in 1895, making every season here since, his get proving to be very large, well turned animals. One pair of two year olds selling for $500.00.

Bertram, an imported Norman Percheron, owned by the Ruble Estate, booked a limited number of mares last season. This horse now nearly twenty years of age, has proved to be a great sire having stood here continuously since 1888.

John L., a Norman Percheron owned by Huntsman and Holmes, also Justice owned by the same parties, made the season here. RIVER VIEW.

The Kenney Bicycle Company at 531 Valencia street is the coast agent for McMurray sulkies, carts and speed wagons, which are acknowledged by all horsemen to be first class in every respect. This company makes sulky and cart wheels to order on short notice at $18, $21 and $25 per pair and guarantee them in every way. Now is the time to get everything in readiness to begin working colts and horses as soon as the rainy season is over.

San Francisco, Saturday, December 21, 1901.

THE COMPLIMENTS OF THE SEASON are extended by the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN this week to its readers, constant and inconstant. The Christmas holidays have become a season of joyousness wherever civilization has obtained a foothold on this earth, and that great and holy truth that "it is more blessed to give than to receive" will be exemplified during the next week in nearly every household. Old Santa Claus, myth though he may be, will pay his annual visit to the little ones from frozen Dawson to sweltering Manila, and from Siberia prisons to the laagers of the Transvaal, and whether the remembrances he leaves be heavy or light the spirit in which they are given will be the value set thereon by the recipient. Whosoever the custom of doing kindly deeds on Christmas day originated it was a glorious thing and the fact that it spread to all parts of the Christian world has done much to advance the cause of "peace on earth, good will to men" that was first promulgated by the Nazarene. That every person who scans these lines may enjoy in full measure the pleasures that come with the Christmas season and that the future may fulfill to one and all every glorious prospect of the imagination is our earnest and sincere wish.

KEEP PAID UP on the colts and fillies that are entered in the Pacific Breeders Futurity. On the second day of January another payment is due on the stake for the produce of mares bred in 1900, and also on the one for mares bred in 1901. These stakes are guaranteed by the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association to be worth $6000 each, and those who have made initial entries in them should see that the payments are kept up. If the mare or colt is dead or the mare slipped her foal or had twins, the right of substitution is yours. It does not make any difference as to the ownership of the substituted foal, so that if your friend or neighbor has one that is not entered and yours is dead, make a dicker with him and substitute. The owners who are breeding with the idea of selling can find nothing like stake entries to increase values. Owners of stock farms get more advertising for the money by making stake entries of their foals than in any other way. Stallion owners get big returns in stud fees the year following the winning of a stake by one of their horse's get. Then there is the pleasure of winning one of these stakes with a colt of one's own breeding. It surpasses that of winning a regular purse, no matter how large the latter may be, as there is the satisfaction of knowing that one's theories of breeding and training have been proven by actual demonstration to be pretty nearly correct. No colt can win a stake unless he is entered in it and the payments kept up. So don't let January 2d go by without making your payments.

A grand lot of mares were bred to Geo. T. Beckers' great young stallion Zombro 2:11 this year. Among them were a full sister to Arrow 2:14 by Silver Bow 2:16 out of Maud Patchen; Lida W 2:18, dam of the great speed producer Nutwood Wilkes 2:16; Italia, the dam of Sid Durfee 2:20; Belle Medium 2:20, dam of Stam B. 2:11 and Dictatus Medium 2:24; Anna J. 2:16; Lady Mack 2:23 by Lemont; Cora by Scarlet Letter out of Canemah 2:19 by Altamont; Bertha S., full sister to Winella 2:24; Scappoose 2:16 by Roy Wilkes; Altateal, Beulah and Lita 2:27, all full sisters to Chehalis; Lady Alfred 2:20; Lady Mack 2:24; May Tilden 2:27 by Altamont; Kitty Kisbar 2:28; Hollywood, dam of three in the list; Kitty Lee 2:29 by Rockwood and many others of royal breeding and with fast records. Zombro covered over a hundred mares this year, but as his season extended from February to October, he closed it in the very best of condition and on his return to Sacramento from Oregon looked like a two year old, as his picture taken just before his departure from Salem, and which is printed elsewhere in this issue will testify.

Money Winners in California.

Below we present to our readers a list of the horses that won $100 or more on the California Circuit during 1901. Just an even dozen of them won over $1000 each, which is a very good showing when the fact is taken into consideration that there were but very few districts fairs given this year. We do not claim absolute accuracy for this compilation, as there are some associations that give small meetings from which it is almost impossible to secure reports, but we think the list will be found pretty nearly correct. Sir Albert S. 2:08½ leads all other horses in the amount won, his six straight races in eighteen straight heats having placed the sum of $2525 to the credit of his owner.

In the adjoining column will be found a list of the money winners on the Great Western Circuit taken from the Christmas Horseman and while the horses there had a big circuit and large purses, the figures do not stand out prominently enough to make the California figures suffer much by comparison. The winnings of horses raced in California this year are as follows:

*Walkover.

Various are the materials which have been used for horseshoes. Gold occasionally and silver frequently were used by the most extravagant of the Roman nobles when Roman prosperity and extravagance was at its highest. Silver shoes are sometimes mentioned in records of much more recent date. Wooden shoes on the mud pattern principle have been employed with success in the western islands of Scotland, and also on deep grounds in America. Some years ago Henry Lucking of Granfield, Wis., drove his teams with large flat wooden shoes strapped over their feet when working them on soft, wet meadow land.

Great Western Circuit Winners.

Below is given a table of the money winners in the Great Western Circuit of 1901. The name of every horse that won $500 or more has been given, also the number of times each winner was unplaced. The purses are uniformly divided into 50, 25, 15 and 10 per cent, and no winner given any credit when distancing the field.

A Popular Veterinarian.

One of the busiest men in California during the year just passed was the well known veterinarian, Dr. C. Masoero, whose opinion in regard to ill or injured horses is considered more valuable than that of any man in California to-day. A graduate of the Royal Veterinary College of Turin, his native city, he received the appointment of Veterinary Surgeon in the Italian

HORSES THAT LIVED A MILLION YEARS AGO.

BY IVY DEE.

The American Museum of Natural History, through an expedition sent out by the Department of Vertebrate Paleontology, has just discovered a complete skeleton—skull, limbs, and all—of a horse that probably lived in this country a million years ago. This horse had characteristics which make it almost certain that the animal was in the direct line of the forbears of the modern horse.

The discovery forms another link in the chain of proof that the horse was originally an American animal. The find is one of the most important and valuable the museum has made.

As a matter of fact, there is abundant geological evidence to prove that the ancestors of the horse of to-day roamed over the western part of this continent long before man came upon the earth, or before the horse appeared upon the steppes of Asia or in the lowlands of Arabia.

Horses were abundant in this country and migrated freely to Asia across the land which has now sunk under water and become the Bering Strait. In spite, however, of the fact that climatic conditions appeared to favor the continuance of the horse on this continent, there came a period when he is found to have become extinct here, although at the same time he existed numerously in Asia and Europe. How it all came about is one of the great unsolved problems of animal distribution.

That more life may be shed upon the prehistoric life of the horse, a handsome donation has been made to the American Museum of Natural History by a man who does not wish his name disclosed. This gift is unique, in that it is one of the first endowments, if not the first, for the investigation of the history of one particular animal. The gift also provides for the mounting and display of the discoveries made, so that within a few years it is expected that the complete story of the remarkable development of the horse can be told in a series of practical illustrations.

Two American expeditions were sent out under the direction of Prof. Henry Fairfield Osborn, Curator of the Department of Vertebrate Paleontology, this year, and two expeditions will be sent out next year and the year following in the same quest. Under the inspiration of the example set by the American Museum of Natural History, the British Museum has also recently sent out an expedition in search of the remains of fossil horses. This expedition is at present making explorations in Greece, and several important discoveries have been made. Remains of the horse known as the hipparion have been found. This, however, is a three-toed animal, and, although a collateral branch, is not in the direct line of the ancestry of the horse.

The only remains of fossil horses that have ever been found in Europe, Africa, or Asia have been the hipparion and the anchitherium. The latter species was believed by Professor Huxley, and by Professor Marsh, of Yale, to be in the direct line of the horse's ancestry; but this view is no longer held, and both the hipparion and anchitherium are now classed as collateral species. All of this is conducive to the belief that the true line of the horse did not exist in Europe, but that he migrated from some distant land.

The two expeditions which were sent out by the American Museum of Natural History this year explored different fields. One went to Texas, while the other went into the central western portions of the country. The expeditions were carefully equipped with necessary apparatus, and were placed in charge of experienced investigators.

The Texan expedition was in charge of Mr. J. W. Gidley, who has made a number of important discoveries of fossil horses. The first discoveries that were of any great value were made only two years ago in Texas. Mr. Gidley, in 1899, himself found a nearly complete skeleton of an animal of the pleistocene period at the head of Rock Creek, Briscoe County, Texas. This species was unique, and was termed the equus Scotti, in honor of Prof. W. B. Scott, of Princeton University.

The same party this year explored the northern edge of the Staked Plains of Texas, near where the former excavations were made. They found early in June the remains of a small herd of prehistoric horses. These animals were of the species known as protophippus. Three detached skulls were found, and six skulls and parts of skeletons, all of the same species.

The period in geological history, as indicated by the strata of the earth in which these discoveries were made, was the upper miocene, estimated by geologists to have been about one million years ago. This was the most extensive collection of bones and fossils ever found. In addition to the fossil horses, there were found remains of a saher-tooth tiger, a contemporary of the protophippus. Valuable fossils of an extinct tapir, and also of the glyptodon, or armored sloth, were also found. How the glyptodon became extinct is another geological mystery. He was a beast growing sometimes to the size of an ox, and resembling a turtle, though with his back in the shape of a mound, instead of being flat. A skull of a small mastodon was also found at the same place.

It was the second party, however, which made the discoveries which are of the greatest value. This expedition was in charge of Messrs. Matthew and Brown, of the museum. The party started in the Black Hills of South Dakota, explored in western Nebraska and in northeastern Colorado, the same section as explored by Professor Cope, but in which little or nothing had been done since.

In an excavation made near Pawnee Butte, Colo., the party found a perfect skeleton of the same prehistoric period, the upper miocene, as the Texas horses. The skeleton consisted of the skull, joints, four perfect limbs, and the principal parts of the back-bone, all in perfect condition. It was the first complete skeleton ever found in this country of the upper miocene period. The descriptions of the complete horse of this period, made by Cope, Marsh, and others, were based upon scattered parts.

This skeleton is one of the most valuable finds of the year. Geologists say that it is almost impossible to find the perfect skeleton of any fossil animal, and that, whenever one is found, it is of exceeding value. This animal's bones will also be mounted, and they will show another step in the evolution of the horse.

The Matthew-Brown party in the same region of country found evidence of the existence of three other kinds of horses which lived contemporaneously with the protophippus, but which were of collateral branches, not in the direct line of ancestry of the modern animal. Remains of five camels were found. The camel, like the horse, was indigenous to North America, but both these indispensable beasts of burden migrated to Europe, Asia, and Africa.

Two or three men have been at work in the museum all summer preparing the skeletons and parts of skeletons already there which display the history of the horse. The fund which has been provided by the anonymous donor will make it possible to mount the new finds with great care and accuracy.

There are only two complete skeletons of prehistoric horses at the museum now. One of these is the famous little four-toed horse, from the collection of Professor Cope, of Philadelphia. This little animal was about the size of a fox, and was an undoubted progenitor of the horse of to-day. His skeleton stands just four hands, or sixteen inches, high. The little animal is called the eohippus, and he lived in the eocene period of the age of mammals, some two million years ago.

The little eohippus is displayed standing under the skeleton of a horse of the preglacial period. This preglacial horse was very large and strong. The little animal, nevertheless, displays undoubted characteristics of the horse. There is the broad space in the lower jaw corresponding to the space for the bit. The teeth are short and simple. The limbs are scarcely larger in diameter than a good-sized pencil, and there are four toes resting upon the ground in the forefoot. There were really five toes on these eocene horses, but the fifth toe was merely a remnant.

In his efforts to display a complete history of the horse's development, Professor Osborn has sent Charles Knight to Europe to make water-color sketches of all existing wild horses, such as the quagga, the zebra, and the wild horse of the Asiatic steppes. Some of these wild animals are liable to become extinct at any time, and it is desired to get accurate representations of them before that event takes place.

Professor Osborn expects that within five years he will have mounted in the museum a complete collection of fossils, pictures, and relics of the horse, showing every step in its evolution, and displaying the several different species of the genus equus in existence upon the earth at the present time.

At the museum there are at present displayed a series of skulls and feet, which show unmistakably how the horse has developed from the four or five-toed animal of 2,000,000 years ago. The pressure of the fore part of the body was undoubtedly exerted upon the middle toe, and gradually, in the process of ages, the superfluous toes were eliminated and the single spliced hoof remained.

The miocene horses just found in Texas and Colorado followed the small eocene animal. The fossil anchitherium of Europe, found to some extent in this country, followed the eohippus. In the anchitherium there were three well-developed toes reaching to the ground on both the front feet. This animal was not in the direct line, however, and the protophippus, which has just been found, takes the place the hipparion until recently occupied in the estimation of scientists.

The hipparion was next in the collateral line, though the pliohippus was in the direct line. The hipparion, it is thought, became extinct without leaving any descendants. In the forms of the horse which flourished in this remote period of America, the lateral toes, although they contained the normal number of bones, were much reduced in size, and did not reach the ground. They were suspended to the outside of and rather behind the middle toe, like the rudimentary outer toes of the deer or the "dew claw" of the dog.

Horses with these queer toes were not met with in the pleistocene period, but then for the first time appeared the true horse, like the modern animal. The outer toes were reduced to rudiments of the metacarpals or metatarsals only, the so-called splint bones entirely beneath the skin, the middle toe greatly elongated, and with its ungual phalanx and hoof expanded, and the stability of the forearm and leg increased by the complete subordination of the ulna and fibula to the larger bones, the radius and tibia, which alone are concerned in the formation of the wrist and ankle joints.

The horse was now developed so far as by his own efforts he ever went. It was the intervention of man, who bred him and assisted in his evolution, that raised the horse to his present stage of magnificent animal life. These high-bred animals will also be included in the exhibition, a race horse descended from Lexington, and a great draught of the Percheron breed, and the smallest Shetland, scarcely over three feet in height. The inferior and little-cared-for animals of to-day exhibit just about the same anatomical characteristics that were displayed by the fossil horses, remains of which are to be found in such abundance in the stratum of the most recent geological age.

In the preglacial period there were a very large number of horses roaming about in this country. Remains of them can be found from Escholz Bay, in the north, to Patagonia, in the south. In South America, however, the horse became quickly extinct, and none of his family, in either the wild or domesticated state, existed there at the time of the Spanish conquest. The tooth of a well-developed horse was found in a preglacial stratum quite recently at Big Bone Beach, near the Bering Strait.

The problem of what caused the extinction of the horse in this country is one that still puzzles geology. The climatic conditions here would seem to have been perfect, for, when the animal was re-introduced, he grew and multiplied without aid from man. The horse in Asia and Europe appears to have been befriended by the semi-civilized peoples of prehistoric human history. It is not impossible that the prehistoric man in this country, however, conceived an enmity to this noble beast, and drove him out of existence.

In that remote period there was no Bering Strait. The mainland was continuous, and migration back and forth from Asia was easily possible. The bear came to America from Asia, and this country sent the horse in return. Africa sent the mastodon, and received the camel in return. The British Isles were at that time connected with the mainland of Europe, and geologists in recent years have discovered remains of animals on the continent of North America which exactly correspond to discoveries in England, showing that migration must have taken place between two regions even so entirely remote from one another.

Long before the recent fossil discoveries shedding such strong light upon the history of the primitive horse, Darwin declared, in his "Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication," that, although existing horses were not marked in any peculiar manner, there was "the probability of the descent of all existing races from a single dun-colored, more or less striped, primitive stock, to which our horses still occasionally revert."

In appearance, therefore, it can be stated, according to the best geologists, that the prehistoric horse in his best development was very like the modern zebra. He roamed over the American continent, especially in the west, and then wandered across the region geologists call arctogaea, which was the mainland stretching from the eastern coast of North America to the western coast of Europe.

Coming nearer to the age of modern man, it is found that wild horses were undoubtedly abundant in Europe in the neolithic or polished-stone period. Quantities of remains of these horses have been found along with the remains of men of that time, showing that the chase of this animal must have been one of the chief occupations of the neolithic man. It is not unlikely that, for the man of this period, the horse was a staple article of food.

The characters of the bones which have been preserved, and certain rude carvings and inscriptions which were made upon bones and the antlers of reindeers, show that these neolithic horses were rather small, heavy in build, with large heads, rough, shaggy manes, and tails very much like the wild horses of the steppes of Asia.

Before recorded history had dawned, however, these horses had been domesticated in Europe. It is doubtful, however, if the modern European horse is the descendant of this domesticated animal, for the probabilities are more in favor of the fact that the horse was derived from horses imported through Greece and Asia from Italy, the Asiatic horse being of a still earlier domestication.

Writers upon the history of the horse have had much discussion as to whether the animal was indigenous to Arabia or Armenia. The splendid development of the Arabian horse, the "horse of romance," has led many to believe that that Oriental country must have been his ancestral home. The plentitude of water and food, such as the wild horse would seek, in Armenia, the country of Noah's Ark, has led others to feel certain that the horse came from there.

Any such discussion as this, however, is as fruitless as the debate upon the exact location of the Garden of Eden. The horse was a roamer, and there is no evidence whatever that he lived at all in Europe or Asia until a very recent period in the history of the world.

The animal, after its extinction here, was first re-introduced into this country by the Spaniards in the sixteenth century. The Aztecs and Toltecs thought the beasts to be servants of the gods. They had not even memory of the ancestors of these animals, who once inhabited their own homes and haunts. But as soon as a few of the animals got loose from their owners, they wandered out into the plains, and began to increase. It seemed that the climate of northern Mexico and Texas was especially created for these animals.

At the present time, through the operation of human agencies, the horse has been diffused throughout the whole of the inhabited portions of the globe. Man has bred and domesticated the animal, and made him a companion. The consequence of the breeding and domestication is to be seen in the comparison of the extreme forms of the Shetland pony, dwarfed into an unnatural size by an uncongenial climate, the thoroughbred racer, and the great Norman truck horse.

The Department of Vertebrate Paleontology of the American Museum of Natural History will devote much of its energy during the next few years to collecting relics of all the periods of the history of the horse. Professor Osborn expects to be able to make certain advantageous exchanges with foreign museums. He wants to collect a complete series of fossils, which will show just how the horse has evolved, just as the museum now displays a remarkable series showing the evolution of the camel, this being the most complete collection of camel specimens in existence.

The curator believes that, when all the specimens have been placed side by side, it will be found that America unquestionably first produced the horse, and that, when the Spanish invaders turned the animal loose upon the western prairies, the horse was but returning to the country of his ancestral home.

Game in Colville Indian Reservation.

BY J. MAYNE BALTIMORE.

Colville Indian Reservation, which is located in northeastern Washington, contains within its limits some excellent hunting grounds. Especially is this true of the territory known as the "North Half."

This region lies between the Columbia River on the south, and the international boundary line on the north. This region is generally very mountainous, among and through which a number of small, swift watercourses flow. Along many of these streams are narrow valleys.

These streams abound in fine fish, while the mountains, forests, and tangled thickets are the habitat of game—mole, smaller, and feathered game. There are neither caribou or elk, however, in the northern part of the reservation. It is not far enough north for the caribou. These stately animals are very seldom met south of the British Columbia line. Some years ago a very few caribou were found along Deep Creek, a tributary of Kettle River; but they have been either killed off, or driven away.

No elk are found nearer than the Matan, Okanogan, and Lake Chelan Mountains. However, the reservation contains the mule deer, the black and white tail deer, black and brown bear, cougar, grey wolf, wolverines, lynx, and wildcat.

Usually, all these animals mentioned make their habitat in the rugged fastnesses of the mountains, and in the shadow of the grand and gloomy forests.

A great many years ago, the Indians claim that both the grizzly and silver tip bear inhabited this region; but, if so, every vestige of these great shambling plantigrades has disappeared. So far as known, there are no cinnamon bear in the state of Washington. This statement is made on the authority of a number of old and experienced hunters, trappers, and guides.

But it is my purpose to speak specially of the game found in the north half of Colville reservation.

Perhaps the animal which makes its abode amidst the loftiest mountains in the reservation is the mule deer. Except when the snow is deep and the weather rather cold, this animal is found along the sides and summits of the mountains, at an altitude of from 2,000 to 3,500 feet above sea level. During very heavy weather the mule deer will descend to the lower benches, down into the shelter of great canyons, to the foothills of towering ranges, and even into outlying valleys. In this country, the animal attains a large size. Some of them have been killed in these regions weighing, when dressed, as high as 300 pounds.

The black-tail deer also live in the mountains and forests, but not so high as the mule deer. They reach a comparatively large size—from 200 to 250 pounds net weight.

Lower, along the foothills, timbered uplands, and along streams and valleys, are found the white-tail deer. These animals, in this part of the country, are commonly known as "cotton tail" or "flag" deer. They are quite small, weighing from 75 to 125 pounds when dressed.

All these animals were once very numerous. Both Indians and whites have constantly preyed upon them, until their numbers have been greatly reduced. This has been the result despite the protection afforded by the game law, which is generally strictly enforced.

Black and brown bear are found in the mountains and forests. As a usual thing, they do not seek the 200 to 400 pounds.

Probably, one of the fiercest animals, and the one most to be dreaded, is the mountain lion, or cougar (filiis concolor). This great skulker lives everywhere in the mountains. At all seasons of the year, the animal is liable to come down into the valleys, and prowl around among the ranches. He is often very destructive to small stock, such as hogs, colts, calves, sheep, etc. When in his native haunts, the cougar is very wary, and exceedingly difficult to approach. His sense of smell is wonderfully acute. It is almost impossible to approach the animal without his knowledge.

When wounded and pressed, the northern mountain lion is a fierce and dangerous foe. In the years past, a good many hunters have been killed by these animals. There are a great many cases recorded where children that have wandered all alone out into the woods have been killed and devoured by cougars. The average weight of a large, full-grown mountain lion is about 250 pounds.

There are a few wolverines found in the reservation mountains. They are hunted entirely for their hides. These animals rarely ever molest domestic animals. When attacked, they will fight savagely. From 80 to 90 pounds is the average weight of the wolverine. The fur is beautiful, and commands a high market price. Owing to the peculiar brown, black, and light stripes on the animal, and also the pungent and disagreeable musky odor it emits, the wolverine is nicknamed "the skunk bear."

Of the large grey wolf, but few are left. For years they have been hunted and trapped by whites and Indians, without mercy. Few are to be found in the reservation. There are a great many coyotes in these regions. These wolves seldom go far back into the mountain fastnesses. They are found principally in the foothills, the valleys, thickets, and

On Beaulieu rocks, in Derwent glades,
Still seems to move to Walton's voice,
Singing of dace and dainty maids;
His water meadows still are wet,
His hatching trout streams leap and glance,
And on their sunlit ripples yet
The flies of his disciples dance.

Anglers complete and incomplete,
The expert or the pretence hand
In friendly rivalry they meet
By loch and river, sedge and sand;
Enthusiasts all, of staid address,
They go their way from east to east,
Alike, in failure or success,
Sanguine and serious to the last.

Whether their lingering footsteps pass
Where Hampshire meadow lands are green,
And where the chalk stream clear as glass
Goes by the pollard tops between;
Where when the warbler folds his wings
And the pale summer moon comes out,
The scented breath of twilight brings
The sacred hour of feeding trout—

Whether the river calls them forth,
That once a brown and modest burn
Splashed down some hillside of the North
Through purple heather tufts and fern;
That now flows by a strenuous tide,
Through whose dark depths the salmon glide
Beneath the rowan and the beech—

For them may no ambition match
Fulfillment of the master's wish,
To throw from dawn to dusk, and catch,
If fortune will, the highest fish;
They live their life; they dream their dream,
The earth beneath, the sky above,
Their battlefield the running stream,
Nature herself their only love

In every mood, in every dress
They know her, and they find her fair;
Unchanged allegiance they confess
Whatever robe she deign to wear—
Her April green on wood and wold,
The splendour of her summer blaze,
The gorgeous weeds of red and gold
With which she greets October days.

Then, when their pensive task is done,
The wayside host's chimney seat
Finds them, good comrades every one,
Prepared their exploits to repeat;
Each as his shifts of sight and touch,
His own expedients each admires,
Each follows still, though not too much,
His own devices and desires.

So does the pastime of their choice,
On Beaulieu rocks, in Derwent glades,
Still seem to move to Walton's voice,
Singing of dace and dainty maids;
The flying centuries come and go,
But underneath the eternal sky,
Where spring by spring the cowslips blow,
The gentle art his votaries ply.

Occasionally, they pounce upon, kill, and devour hogs. They are very partial to pork. In thus exposing themselves to attack, many of these bears are slain.

A NIGHT WITH THE HOUNDS.

BY CHAS. WESLEY KYLE.

"Say, I'll come; if I lose a scrap of this sport, Let me be boiled to death with melancholy."
—Twelfth Night.

"Say," said Taylor to Pete Donnelly, as he shuffled the cards for a game of "freeze out" for a turkey, in the rear of Nick's saloon, "don't you know that we are missin' the best sport in the world by not havin' some crack fox hounds? The wildcats, foxes, and coons multiplyin' and a cussin' the earth all about here, an' not a trailin' dog to be found; you'd think two-thirds of our population was niggers, the way the chicken roosts suffer, and there's not a hand raised agin' 'em. What do you fellows say to havin' a night's hunt sometime next week?"

"Ah, come off!" said Donnelly. "You're always bluffin'. There isn't a pup in this whole section that could follow a cow path, to say nothing of runnin' a fox to cover or trailin' a coon or a bob-tail."

"Don't you run away with the idea that I don't know my business, especially when it comes to night hunting of any kind. I'm prepared to give you a go behind the finest trailers in the land," replied Taylor.

Every one became interested at once; but Taylor, knowing his advantage, eyed each in turn, and pulled leisurely at his cigar before proceeding. After he had been sufficiently urged, he said: "Well, boys, I'll tell you what I've got up my sleeve. Watson, Professor George Watson, of Sacramento, the most ardent enthusiast on night hunting west of the Rockies, has just promised to come up here and bring along his celebrated pack of hounds, and give us a night's sport. I've never seen his dogs, but, from what I hear, they are the very best strain of the foxhound, all imported from Virginia; and Virginia, you know, has long held the reputation of producing the finest hounds in the world. It only remains for us to fix the date and let him know."

The whole party at once became interested. The "turkey stakes" were withdrawn, and each man in turn began dusting his memory, so that bear, cougar, fox, wildcat, and raccoon reminiscences should be shown in the best possible light.

A number of the party had spent most of their years on the frontier, and many were the thrilling experiences told of adventure with wild animals of the valleys and mountains. These were supplemented with references to Roosevelt's "Hunting Trips," Gibson's "Camp Life," Ingersoll's "Birds Nesting," and Seton Thompson's works, and those of many other authors, touching the habits, habitat, pursuit, and capture of all kinds of four-footed animals foreign to civilization. These authors were all possessed of a full amount of vigor. They had won the princely fortune of good health by climbing the mountains, breathing the pure air, and engaging in the exhilarating pursuit and pastime of the strenuous chase. Day or night, rain or shine, cut but little figure with them; they were always ready for the trail, with keen desires for the pleasures which it affords.

No wonder that in every gathering of sportsmen reference is made to their works, and that their names are becoming household words with all lovers of the field.

Then the party began to discuss the most favorable ground over which to hunt.

"There's plenty of foxes, coyotes, wildcats, and coons up the river," said Taylor, "but there is the fatal objection of the rocky steeps, where none but the hounds could follow."

"Over by the big reservoir is the natural home for foxes and coons," said Donnelly. "We could not miss having some grand fun over there."

"Oh, if it's coons you want, just come down Alder Creek, where the vineyards border its banks, and you can tree one every fifteen minutes!" said another.

"Vell," said Schneider, "I hedt you zum beer dot ef you pe commen' by der oldt roadt oudt bei der pig ditsch, fernenst dose rock ridsches, you yumps a bobdail oop. I vos seen von der some dines already, yet."

"Are you sure it was a bobtail, Fritz?" asked Donnelly.

"Vos I schure? Bei Gott, don't I knowin' a hob-dail? Der punches on der ear sticken oudt, und schdumpe oaf der dail. You tink I make me some monkey-doodle piness yet? Oh, nine, nine! I knows der bob-cat. It vos a bobdail, you bedt."

"All right, Fritz," said Donnelly, in a mollifying tone, "we'll go that way when we start out, and see if we can get track of him."

After two hours' talk no place could be agreed upon, and it was decided to describe the ground to Mr. Watson, when he should arrive, and then let him decide the course to be taken.

All the sportsmen were keen to witness the quality and endurance of the newly-imported hounds. There were five of the pack that were almost equal. Their well-shaped heads, wide yet delicately formed nostrils, and soft, depending ears of medium size spoke well for scent and quality, while their deep chests, strong limbs, and well-padded feet were a guarantee of endurance in the chase.

The work of the pack was a source of never-ending the hounds were unleashed, and away they darted into the thick undergrowth which skirted a stretch of water oaks near a small stream, a breadth of lower lands lying heyoud. Some moments of silence intervened, when the music of the whole pack broke upon the sleeping scene, rolling through the trees, and echoing from hill to hill, a perfect flood of melody set to quick-step time. The chain of silence with which night had bound the hills and vales was broken, and, link by link as it fell, a note of melody rang out and blended with the song of the waters and the luting of the winds as they set the tree-tops tossing, as if marking time to the wild, weird, yet inspiring music. Presently the music changed to broken time, and then came the long yowl of old Racket. "Treed!" exclaimed the leader of the hunt, and away went the whole party, rushing through the undergrowth, which in places was well-nigh impenetrable; over the heaps of smooth cobbles, now rendering footing doubly insecure by discussion, which partook, I must say, largely the form of assertion, each man reiterating his opinion with more pronounced emphasis as the time for the hunt drew near. Several persons had seen something of the work of a few of the hounds, and these men never tired, holding forth on every occasion, forming the central figure of interested groups of willing listeners, as they described the work of this or that special hound.

Rackete, Redeye, Highstep, and Clipper, the latter a very "sweet hitch," as one supposed to be versed in matters doggy was fond of calling her, seemed to have the lead in the minds of the majority.

The long-looked-for evening finally arrived, and with it came a goodly number of persons from Sacramento, at the invitation of Mr. Watson, the gentlemanly owner of the famous pack. He was every inch a sportsman, a glance at his makeup revealing that fact, from his strong, high-topped boots to the corduroy hat, while at his side, over the regulation hunting coat, depended a highly-polished, silver-mounted horn. His quiet and gentlemanly deportment commanded the respect and won the confidence of the whole party at once, which was composed of doctors, lawyers, merchants, and men of affairs, an unusual gathering for such an occasion.

The ubiquitous small boy was present in great numbers, and was only gotten rid of by the most emphatic orders. This was finally accomplished, and the whole party wheeled away to the rendezvous previously agreed upon, from whence the hunt should start.

A light rain was falling. The dogs were straining at the leash, keen for their work. After a few moments the leader of the hunt gave the command; reason of the rain; through rushing streams and the rank vegetation of swampy places, all anxious to be in at the death. There was no difficulty in keeping the proper direction, as the hounds kept signaling "At bay," every few moments. Finally we all found ourselves beneath the branches of a wide-spreading water-oak. On the approach of the men, the hounds grew fairly frantic, leaping against the body of the tree as if to climb it whether or no. Then, under the leadership of Racket, Redeye, or Clipper, they would circle about the tree, some twenty-five or thirty feet from its base, and, returning, would give voice as strongly as before.

"Why do they do that?" queried one of the party. "Why? Oh, you teuderfoot!" exclaimed an old hunter. "They do that to satisfy themselves that the coon has not jumped from any one of the branches and made off, while they were at the base of the tree."

This performance was repeated several times, while two of the hunters were preparing to climb the tree, in order to locate the quarry. On one of these rounds the hounds struck a fresh scent. Oh, the music they made as they dashed away! It was enough to stir the blood of the most phlegmatic. They led away up the creek, crossing and recrossing the same at short distances as they proceeded, all the while giving tongue at every jump, showing them to be, in the language of the initiated, on "a hot trail." Their voices grew fainter and fainter, though still easily distinguishable.

"That must be a fox," said one of the party. "No coon could run like that."

"Don't be so sure," said the leader. "Coons are 'foxy.' I've known them to give the hounds a merry race, especially along a stream where they can break the trail by dashing into the water when hard pressed."

Now the music could be heard more plainly; nearer and nearer they came, describing the last half of a long loop, directing their course towards the tree under which we were still standing, but turning aside and "treeing" in a large willow standing on the borders of the brook about forty yards distant from where we stood.

We started for the willow, when I felt a detaining hand, as Mr. Watson said: "Wait a bit. I want to call your attention to this dog." There was Racket, watching intently the tree under which we had been standing. The action of the other dogs had had not sufficient influence to draw him away from the game he had traced. "He will not leave here until he knows we have abandoned his find," said Mr. Watson. "It is a remarkable trait, one which I have never known another dog to possess to such a degree as this one."

He then called one of the helpers, and, leaving him at the tree, we started to join the party at the willow below. As we approached, the scene presented was a stirring one. The bright shafts of light shot from the acetylene-gas hull's-eyes was being played upon the foliage of the tree.

Two climbers were already far out upon the diverging branches, flashing their lanterns along every limb in turn.

A "Coon Bottom" on the Russian River.

"Here he is! here he is!" shouted one of them. "Look out," he called; "I'm going to drop him." At the report of his revolver, a body was seen to leap from the tree, and strike the ground in the center of a group of hounds. There was a mix up. The younger dogs dashed in, only to recoil from the conflict with yelps of surprise. The men yelled and danced about from pure excitement.

"Yah! yah! zee bobcat, bei Gott! he's a volliper, too," yelled Schneider.

"Get a club," "Bring the ax," "He'll kill those dogs," and other similar expressions were indiscriminately greeting our ears.

"Watch this dog, Redeye," said Watson. The dog referred to had been dashing around the others, closing up, but never taking hold. Then, as if shot from a gun, he leaped in, and the group became settled. He had secured his hold on the throat of the animal. The other old dogs stood back; while slowly but surely the life of the quarry was being choked out. For fully three minutes he held on—till the game ceased to struggle. When he loosened the grip of his vice-like jaws, it was limp and lifeless.

"Bei yiminy, vat you dink now? Fritz Schneider not knowin' de bobcat, hey?"

"Oh, shut up, you crazy Dutchman!" said Donnelly; "it isn't a cat. It is, however, a very large coon." And so it proved to be, weighing twenty-nine pounds.

"Just as I expected," said one who had been silent on the subject. "I had an idea it was an old coon."

"Oh, yes, you did! Why in thunder didn't you say so before?" asked Taylor.

"Let me tell you why," replied the man addressed. "The instinct possessed by all animals to protect their young is universal. Nothing but this would have led any animal so near the first tree under the circumstances; and it was for the very purpose of leading the dogs away from her young that this mother coon came near enough to the 'home tree' to let the hounds catch her scent. I'll gamble that there are young coon in the tree from which she led the dogs."

But no one disputed him. Then he continued:—

"I followed the dogs up stream to a point where a log lies across the brook, about half a mile above, and she crossed on it, and ran about a hundred yards, then up and along a slanting tree, jumping into the swamp beyond, and swimming to its farther edge; then described a small circle, doubled on her track, and came back, and crossed the brook again on the fallen log, jumped into the stream, and did not leave it for more than a hundred yards. It took the dogs some time to figure out the puzzle she had drawn; but they finally went to work, gradually widening their circle, for the fourth time, until they caught her trail where she had left the stream, by spot. Stanford, Sam Brannon, Phil Armour, and half a score of other dominating spirits of their day, here unearthed the yellow metal which brought them notoriety.

Just over the northeast but two or three miles could be seen, gliding in the moonbeams, the far-famed region of "Nigger Hill" and Mormon Island. Coons were small game in those days; gold was the only object of the feverish chase. It was followed, too, at what a cost of honor and life no one will of the dogs.

Schneider was wild with delight. "I knowin ve geets de bobcat! Bei Gott, dem vos purty schmart hounds. I grilif oon hoondred tollar fer dot Redeye."

"I hear old Racket at bay," said Watson; "he's fully a half mile off to our right. Listen!"

All ears came to attention. Sure enough, now and then could be faintly heard the old dog's deep bay. Away we went, our course leading through the thickest and roughest of the old mining region, ever know; the records were never made, save in the unseen volume of life. When it is revealed, we may know the result and the incidents of that perilous fever, which excited men to untold endeavors, heroic and otherwise.

Mendocino Deer Hunters.

I was abruptly called back from my reflections by the baying of the hounds, which had again been given the word, "Go to 'em, boys!" but a moment before.

"Treed at the first jump!" exclaimed one of the men.

"Yes," said Mr. Watson, "that is Clipper. She is fleet of foot, and soon brings the game to bay, if it be other than fox or coyote."

We were not long in again surrounding the tree in which the game had sought safety from the dogs.

"You may kill this one," said Mr. Watson, addressing prospect holes on every side, some of them yawning to interminable depths.

"Look where you're stepping," yelled the guide; "the grass or brush may cover a hole. Keep close, and follow my footsteps, and I'll bring you through all right."

In silence we plodded along, save ever and anon Mr. Watson would shout, "Go to 'em, boys!" which would be answered by a chorus of yelps from the whole pack of hounds, which had ceased bunting, and honored old Racket's find. Our tramp was punctuated by imprecations from one of the party and then another, varying in intensity from "Darn it!" to full, rounded "damns!" But finally we arrived safely beneath a large oak, somewhat blown, but happy in anticipation of another good capture.

The tree presented a perfect canopy, its long, drooping branches being interlaced with thorn and vine.

"No climbing that tree," said Harry. "What shall we do?"

"Let me try the effect of a few inquiring shots? I think I can chase him out," said the man with the repeating shotgun. Bang! bang! bang! and then came a crash, and the coon struck the ground, where the dogs met it, ready for the fray. The tree stood on the banks of an irrigating ditch, which was now well filled with water. The men ran in upon the dogs, and there was such a furor of fighting, yelling, and kicking as one seldom experiences. Out of it all the coon dashed, and leaped into the stream. The silence of the next instant was broken by Taylor, uttering regrets on what he termed the senseless action of the party in crowding near the dogs. He was yet speaking when the noise of a battle royal reached us from some fifty yards down the ditch. We no sooner reached the scene of conflict than the struggle was over, and another large coon was added to our list.

It was now three o'clock; but before we reached the buggies, another coon was "treed." It took the initiative, leaping to the ground of its own motion. What a fight it did put up! Its hide seemed to be made of rubber. The hounds could not, for some time, get a firm hold upon it. Its claws seemed sharp as steel and its teeth like needles. Two of the dogs came out of the fight severely scratched and bitten. Finally Clipper got hold of one hind leg and Racket of the other, Redeye catching at the back of the neck, and by degrees working around to his favorite and fatal hold on the throat. Even then it took some time to conquer the evident king of the band of robbers, whose raids had been depleting the hen-roosts of the district for seasons past.

"All Coons Look Alike to Us."

which time she was away out on the hill, describing the curve and heading back to the home tree.

"Such a tangle was enough to fool any dog, but these are regular bloodhounds for following a scent. Such an exhibition of staying quality and marvelous tracking is worth a day's travel to see. With such dogs coon hunting is a sport, sure enough."

"Then, did you notice the neat way in which Redeye smothered the old coon? All the other dogs just took hold anywhere, and held on like vices; but Redeye waited his opportunity, and, dashing in, caught the coon by the throat in his vice-like jaws, and never let go until its life was extinct."

"That's his particular business," said Mr. Watson; "he never wastes any strength in fighting, and seldom if ever takes any other hold on the game, whatever it may be. No, he has not been trained to do so; in fact, I do not see how it would be possible to train a dog for any particular part of the sport. Like most good dogs, he simply acts upon his own instinct, or reason. Perhaps it is experience, or the sum of all these qualities."

Sure enough, there were two young coons in the tree where old Racket still stood guard. They were easily located, and shot without difficulty.

The rain had ceased falling while the above comments and kills were being made, and the well-nigh full moon had come out, covering the scene with a flood of silver light. The night was warm, and the fresh breeze invigorating; white, flocculent clouds drifted lazily across the sky, splashed with fragmentary rainbows. The ground all about us now bore evidence of the stirring scenes which had here been enacted half a century ago. It had been overturned and washed out by the gold hunters of '49, who had left the smooth, round cobbles, ranging from pebbles to footballs in size, now heaped in irregular mounds and windrows.—carns, they seemed to me, of ruined hopes and fond aspirations, more than monuments of success. Resting here a few moments, contemplating the weird and solemn beauty of the scene, my thoughts were turned back to that strange, wild scene of avarice and greed, when the foundations were being laid for many of the colossal fortunes of to-day on this very

"Hello! 'Ollowlegs; what'd'ye know?" asked Wenzel Dunne upon meeting "Doc" Cox at the Sportsmen's Symposium one day.

"Nothin'" replied 'Ollowlegs, as he complacently sipped a Wheeling stogie to one side of his good-natured phiz, and added carelessly, after several puffs, "Here, get on this side o' me, Dunne; you'll get the flavor better. Sorry, me boy, I haven't another one."

"Glad of it. Whew! but that's a Teamster's Regalia!" replied Dunne. "Been striped bass fishing lately?" he quizzed.

"No, not for several weeks," 'Ollowlegs answered. "The last time I wuz out, I had an incident happen me that drove fishin' from my mind for some time."

"Indeed! and why, pray? Same bad luck as usual?"

"Oh! no; this wuz a dream. But, say," answered 'Ollowlegs, "it was so realistic that its impressions are vividly before me yet."

"Well, then, cut loose and let me have it," prompted Dunne, "for there are others, you know, 'Doc'."

"You see, it wuz this way: I fell asleep on the Tiburon boat when returning from a pleasant day's outing in Raccoon straits and about there trolling for bass. Hard-mouth Swain was along in the boat that Sunday. When the ferryboat started for home, I hunted a cosy corner, and, before I knew it I was sound asleep." 'Ollowlegs paused contemplatively for a few minutes and then proceeded.

"In my dream I seemed to be walking along a country road shaded with luxurious trees and winding gently around the sunny and verdure-clad hilly slopes. The day apparently was a splendid one and the scenery most charming. Intent in the enjoyment of the manifold beauties of nature I was suddenly brought to a standstill by the hail of a familiar voice, and turning in the direction of the call, I was amazed to see 'Doc' Watts sitting on a bench by the road side. It appeared to me that several years elapsed since I had met him. He was looking in splendid health, genial and smiling as ever and he also appeared extremely prosperous. I then observed a fish basket and rod case on the ground beside him."

"After the usual greetings were over, gossip about mutual friends, etc., and a small fire of sportsman's topics had been indulged in, he picked up the fish basket, opened it, and with an elated chuckle showed me a catch of the most beautiful plump trout I had ever laid my eyes on. Each one was over fifteen inches long."

"I took every one with a single fly of my own design, on a No. 16 hook!" he said. "Every fly fought like a gladiator, but come right up to my establishment and have lunch with me and I'll tell you all about it."

"We started off and before going far we turned into a majestic avenue lined with chestnut trees. I noticed that most of the trees were covered with moss, which gave them a very venerable appearance. I also observed with some surprise, that at the foot of each tree there was a basket. Many of these receptacles had chestnuts in them, but those allotted to the oldest trees were the largest baskets and contained far less chestnuts than the others."

"In reply to several questions the only answer I got from 'Doc' was, 'That the grove was a great resort for his patients.'"

"Well, to cut a long story short, we soon reached a large and imposing building, into which we entered. There were servants in waiting, rare paintings and every evidence of wealth and refinement. I was very much astonished and awaited developments. In due time lunch was announced and I was ushered into a very comfortable apartment, where I found 'Doc' seated at the head of a well appointed table, with perhaps a half dozen or so very professional looking gentlemen seated around the board. I was introduced to each one. 'Doc' wound up the introductions by informing me that the company were the faculty of his sanatorium—Well, I wuz all at sea, even if it wuz a dream."

"Meals eaten in dreams don't take long, so there wuz another shift and I remember myself and 'Doc' alone again. He turned to me and said, 'I have realized my ambition, you know I have always believed that lying was a disease. Now, I have followed a theory and that is, that a number—the more the better—of those afflicted should be brought together and allowed to operate on each other. The results will be, that the lesser liars are crowded out and finally disgusted by the greater liars. This then would effect a radical cure for many. For those left over, the big prevaricators, and some obscure cases, I have invented other and efficient treatment. In my studies of this disease, particularly the taints that sportsmen are saturated with, I found out that a good memory was essential in the make-up of a successful follower in the lingual gymnastic path of Ananias. Most liars have poor memories. This results, after, in their undoing. Those who have retentive minds are dangerous, not only to the community at large, but to themselves; for a career of successful prevarication often engenders a condition where vaulting ambition o'erleaps itself. The reason for devoting my fortune and attention to this philanthropic scheme was prompted years ago, by an angling episode, in which a very dear friend of mine was the principal figure and at that time showed the preliminary lamentable symptoms of becoming an artistic and unscrupulous liar."

"My friend went trout fishing one Sunday to San Andreas lake. Arriving there he noticed myriads of fish jumping near shore. He prepared his light tackle in greeful anticipation of much sport. He fished hard and long, changing his flies many, many times, but nary a fish caught he. 'Black Jack' Lemmer and 'Dick' Brooks were fishing from a boat anchored near a tulip point and were catching many fine large fish. The secret of their success was, they knew where to find fish, also that bait was the only effective lure for that day and the prevailing conditions."

The three anglers met on the road home. Lemmer and Brooks, who had been amused spectators of my friend's futile efforts, showed their well filled creels and indulged in much badinage at his expense. Being both good sportsmen, they generously shared the fish with their unlucky brother fisherman. My friend, when he reached the city, struck a bee line for the Lick House, where, to an admiring circle of acquaintances and spectators, he exhibited a splendid string of fish and told wondrous stories of his great abilities as an angler."

"Lemmer accused him of his delinquencies on the following day, for these affairs come out quickly. He was stricken with contrition and from that day to this, thank Heaven! he has been a truthful angler."

"Now," added the Doctor, "if you will come with me I shall take great pleasure in conducting you through our grand institution. Here you will meet a number of our patients, most of whom I believe are not unknown to you and you may also acquire a general idea of our method of treatment."

"Proceeding through several apartments we presently came to, what proved to be the entrance to a large assembly hall. Entering the portals, we were in a cosy vestibule, at one side of which I was amazed to

"A dog man," continued the Doctor, "is one who is always looking after a dog that don't cost him anything, he also wants plenty of free advertising and is consequently the volunteer bosom friend of every newspaper man he meets. These gentry will buy a dog one day for a dollar; the next day, after the dog has been vigorously touted as being the best of his breed in the country, he is worth $500. If his new owner does not make a living out of the dog until he sells him and gets another the same way, the poor canine has a hard time of it and his master goes thirsty and has to borrow small change and postage stamps. This style of business is naturally productive of some superlative liars. Dog men—and also novices who have unfortunately come in contact with them—are one and all imbued with the idea that they are great veterinary fellows. A dog man of six weeks experience knows more about curing sick dogs (and making dogs sick) than a vet who has gone through the curriculum of the best colleges and several post graduate courses besides. They never look at a dog but what they discover some ailment and offer volumes of observe Professor James Markland seated at a desk. In response to my enquiring look the Doctor remarked:

"The Professor is our official handicapper. He is an expert on liars and a prize winning performer himself. Instead of trying to cure him when he came here for treatment, as he is neither a shooter or fisherman—among which classes our efforts are principally directed at present—we believed it good policy, to appoint him official handicapper. He places the patient in the trial heats for position."

"I thought Jim was a sportsman," I answered the Doctor. "He runs dogs you know, to say nothing of giving bankruptcy tips on horses and fighters."

"We must draw the line somewhere, or be swamped with business," replied the Doctor. "We have a few patients who have a fancy for dogs, and we are culling out the fanciers from the dog men pure and simple. The fanciers are generally truthful men."

"Where do you make the distinction between fanciers and dog men?" I asked. "I, like many others, thought they were one and the same."

"Oh! no," he quickly replied. "A fancier is an individual who has lots of money and takes a pride in sending 3000 miles for a high priced dog so that he can win at a bench show over some other fancier who also bought a dog and won over other fanciers at a preceding show, don't you see. The fancier business goes on in an increasing ratio and the last winning purchaser is the king pin. Once in a while a fancier so far forgets himself as to commit the great indiscretion of trying, for many years, to raise and breed a cracker-jack, but this devotion to the game requires brains as well as money and consequently this brand of fancier is few and far between."

gratuitous and persistent advice therefor, or, in the nature of gilding the lily, suggest a few wrinkles and medicaments that will improve the dog's style and action. If a remedy they try is not effective, without hesitation another is immediately applied. Anything suggested by anybody else is also given a trial on the dog. Above all things heroic treatment is the great trial horse of the circuit. Blisters, caustic and other particularly corrosive stuff to kill mange for instance, has given many a man, whom nature originally ordained for a hod-carrier, a false reputation as a 'corkin' good dog doctor.' Sometimes when a dog dies under this treatment, the dog man consoles the owner by saying, 'B'gosh! I gave him just enough to kill him, I wuz a little too careful—a few drops more would of saved his life.'

The treatment and friendship of the dog man and his kind is veneered with a protestation of regard and a saving of money to the party interested. This fallacy is proved by the fact that the dog man is as good a borrower as he has merit in the lying cult.

"Dogs situated as I have spoken about must have a hell of a time," the Doctor continued with some warmth. "For do you know fleas are pretty hardy and if they won't exist on a dog, that dog's time does not cut in on a bed of roses."

"Following our theory, similia similibus curantur, in connection with the treatment we give the dog men for the lying habit, we also propose to give them a course of dog medicines and in fact give them the same deal that the dogs get. If the dog men are not benefitted (or killed) it will surely work out some good for man's best friend."

"Turning around the Doctor pointed to an alcove, which appeared to be fitted up as a sort of drug shop. One large cabinet I noticed was labelled 'Squatts Blatant Dog Blemishes.' He remarked, 'That's for the dog men.'"

"Then smiling good-naturedly as he caught my elbow, the Doctor said: "Now, 'Ollowlegs, me boy! let us go upstairs, we are just in time for the afternoon assembly." And up we went and were soon comfortably installed in what I was told was the visitor's gallery. From there I had a fine view of a large hall, fitted up with rows of seats, like a theatre."

There was a packed house, many of those present I quickly recognized when the lights were turned on in full. The doctor explained that this was "tryout" day, or in other words, a selection of the biggest liars by competitive effort."

"At the end of the hall was a structure that appeared to be a combination of pulpit and kiosk, in one portion of this was affixed a large switchboard. Seated in the pulpit I observed "Dustproof Harry." At the switchboard was an operator, a small, freckle-faced, red-headed person who much resembled Dave Sinclair. Dustproof Harry, the Doctor told me, was installed as Dean of the Chapter immediately upon his entrance to the sanatorium. He was believed to be an incurable and was at once given the position of presiding genius. The switchboard, to enable him to pump hot air to country newspapers, etc., was put in at his suggestion and the red-headed individual was sent for to operate the system, for which billet he proved most efficient."

Dustproof Harry opened the meeting, after being introduced (at his request) as a "Special Agent" of the State Fish and Game Distraction Association. In his preliminary remarks he complimented the State Board of Fish Commissioners (in almost the same words that he used in a speech at Salinas) upon the efficient work that had been done, etc., etc., and impressed upon his audience the importance of the personnel of the Board, which he said was composed of very wealthy men and therefore true sportsmen. One of the gentleman was worth so much and also had splendid game preserves in the northern part of the State, another member of the Board was also a very wealthy man, the third was a rich man but not quite as wealthy as the other two. This introduction led to the formation then and there of a branch of the State Association, Dustproof Harry expressed his appreciation at the formation of another club which would recommend the renomination of Governor Gage for a second term and then in pursuance with the objects of the meeting, called upon a gentleman from the interior, who closely resembled Dr. Barker, to address the assembly.

"The gentleman called upon was brief in his remarks which savored of the Sanford and Merton style of oratory and was besides, punctuated with the personal pronoun, I, 94 times in seven minutes. This speaker signally failed to enthrall his hearers."

"The man in the pulpit then showed his executive ability by at once calling for a fish story. The next speaker told the story of a fishing trip he once made to a lake in a Maine. He graphically described how he used a three-ounce rod and the lightest kind of tackle. Of a sudden he had a strike that would have pulled him overboard, but for the guide's presence of mind in catching him by the seat of the breeches with the gaff and pulling him inboard at a critical time. He played the fish for three hours and forty-three minutes and then landed what proved to be a thirty-six pound lake trout. The story was received with a silence of several seconds. Then a determined voice proclaimed—

"You're a damn liar."

"The speaker's face was illuminated with satisfaction when his challenger, who looked like Horace Smyth, arose and said—

"Everybody knows who has fished in that lake, Gridiron lake they call it, to which there is no inlet, that there ain't a fish weighing less than fifty pounds in the lake. The bottom of this body of water is streaked with lateral fissures, the suction of which is so heavy that fish smaller than fifty pounders are not strong enough to resist the current."

"Why don't the water all run out of the lake?" interjected Jim Pariser.

"The water used to go out of that lake, but the State of Maine passed a law prohibiting it, and the "Bears ain't in it with ducks," proclaimed Al Cumming, who was next on the list. "I remember once in the old days, I was shooting on the Alameda marsh; I used then a powerful 10 gauge muzzle loader and with it I could bring 'em out of the clouds. On this day the wind was just right and ducks were flying by the thousand. In one slough they were so thick they were packed in layers. I gradually worked around until I got in range and then gave the bunch both barrels. I had in such a heavy load it knocked me over. Quickly regaining my feet, I was amazed to see a solid mass of ducks, acres in extent, in full flight, and not a single dead or wounded duck in the slough. I began to think I had forgotten to put shot in the old gun, when, just then, the birds commenced to drop, one by one at first, until in a few moments it began to literally rain ducks. When the flock opened out and each duck had a chance to look out for itself the dead ones in the top layer came to ground. I picked up four wagon loads of ducks, principally fat mallards."

"During the lull which followed," Ollowlegs continued, "I remarked to the Doctor that I was surprised to note the absence of the fat kennel editor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN."

"He was here for awhile," replied the Doctor. "He snored so much at night that the other patients kicked. He was regarded as an incurable anyhow. So to fill out his vacation he struck a bargain with a wealthy rancher in this vicinity and now he is putting in remunerative time o' nights sleeping in a light tent located in the middle of an 80-acre wheat field. His nocturnal nasal talents are utilized to frighten the geese away from the rancher's sprouting crop of winter wheat."

"Just now occurred a lively racket at the head of the hall and an excited individual madly rushed up the passage way, knocking down several people in his impetuous stampede. We soon were informed that Dustproof Harry was the disturbing element. He had just been wired that Chief Deputy Babcock had resigned and he was hoofing it to the nearest railroad station to catch a train for the city, so that he could get in his application first for the vacancy. The Doctor informed me further, that these spasmodic breaks took place monthly, just about salary day, but the occurrence I witnessed was more rampant than usual."

"Looking out of the window," the narrator went on, "I could see him scratching gravel down the road so that you could not see his coat tails for the dust he kicked up. At the end of the avenue was a water has remained there ever since."

"When the applause subsided, the chair acknowledged another speaker, an angler of renown as a champion fly-caster."

"Some time ago," he commenced, "when I was on a train crossing the Colorado plateau, a party of us were in the observation car. I was showing a friend some of my fine fishing tackle and explaining their beauties. Suddenly a woman's agonized scream rang out, looking up I observed a beautiful spring hat sailing through the air. Grasping the situation at once, I quickly adjusted rod, reel and line, tied on my favorite Truckee cast, and although the train was running sixty miles an hour, with one skillful cast I caught the hat, reeled in, and had the pleasure of presenting to my half-fainting fellow passenger, her almost lost treasure. She showed her appreciation of my timely assistance by taking a golden pheasant feather from her hat and presented it to me with many expressions of gratitude. I have since used the feather in making a choice lot of trout flies, in commemoration of the occasion—I have a dozen of the flies here now and will show them to those who doubt my story."

"During the examination of the flies," continued Ollowlegs, "I saw a number of familiars on my side of the house, there seemed to be present, Henry Skinner, Phil Bekeart, Harry Hosmer, Johnny Coleman, Stump Wyman, John Butler, John Lemmer, Lloyd Eaton, Bittern Bill, Parson Jackson and a lot of other fellows I know. I asked the Doctor if they also were liars."

"No, not exactly," he replied, "they are here under examination. While it is true they have developed some peculiar symptoms we are not sure of their complete infection. We have tapped them, just as is done with dropsy patients, and the fluid is now in the laboratory for analysis, after which their status will be determined."

W. J. Street, after order was restored, told a story about hunting grizzly bears in Yosemite valley. He said that the proper way to get the bear was to lie in wait, stationed in the forks of a tree. When the bear passed underneath, it was an easy trick to drop down on his back and cut out his liver with a howie knife. "Bear's liver for breakfast is an epicure's dish," he concluded.

high barred gate, the runner paused not, but struck it with a crash—

"Just then I awoke; the ferryboat was bumping into the piles at the landing, and as I arose I sniffed the aroma of Market street slip at low tide."

"Now, Dunne," said Ollowlegs in conclusion, "if you write the story of my dream it will prove you to be the biggest liar on the plantation."

Pacific Coast Field Trials.

The second forfeit for the Derby nominations has been paid on twenty-one entries. The selection of Santa Maria as the headquarters for the field trials next month seems to meet with the general approval of all the sportsmen interested. Both John Lucas and W. B. Coutts are now located near Santa Maria with their string of dogs. Chas. Babcock proposes to proceed south within a few days with Mr. W. W. Van Arsdale's dogs. Correspondence with Prof. Balmer indicates that he will be invited to judge the club trials next month. The following is a list of the probable Derby starters:

Advice to Hog Raisers.

Clayton C. Pervier, of Sheffield, Illinois, is both a hog breeder and feeder, breeding solely for his own use. He knows as much about porcine nature as any living man, but frankly admits that he has yet much to learn. Always ready to give hog raisers the benefit of his experience, he does not assume to be an authority. Success is largely due, he says, to the selection of breeding sows. Every year, in December, he selects from his drove fifteen of the spring sows who have made the greatest gain during the season, keeping in mind at the same time the type he wants for breeding purposes. He carefully avoids all extremes in length and breadth, and never keeps his brood sows more than one season. In this respect his policy is diametrically opposed to that pursued by other breeders, who retain brood sows year after year; but Mr. Pervier says his plan has given him best results.

Having selected his brood sows, he separates and gives them plenty of range and grass, a combination strengthening bone and making muscle. His brood sows are fed liberally on corn, milk, and slops, and are never stinted. There is more danger in being too thin than too fat. Sows should weigh about 300 pounds at farrowing time, and he pays special attention to keeping the litters dry and warm. He prefers May pigs, as they weigh more at eight or nine months than those born in March or April, cold weather producing no growth. Mothers are fed lightly on corn for a few days after farrowing, and are then fed heartily and given good pasture, never being allowed to get emaciated during the suckling period. Mr. Pervier deprecates the practise of feeding sour food to young pigs, and attributes much

"That's good enough for hogs," he retorted, as the grain disappeared from sight. "They'll find it." "They had to find it or starve, but he found there was no profit in that kind of feeding."

During the summer feeding is done in pasture, moving about over high ground. Mr. Pervier disregards the theory that new corn produces cholera, not having had a case from that cause in twenty years; but in the summer of 1898 he fed old corn all summer, and lost two-thirds of his drove by cholera, afterwards discovering that they had needed more green feed and less corn. He has never repeated the mistake. But he feeds new corn lightly at first, as it disorders the stomach and invites disease. Corn is fed but twice a day, to keep the appetite keen. Pure water he considers of the utmost importance, and prefers well or spring water to flowing streams, which carry germs. The hog is addicted to the drinking habit, and many fail to make profitable gains on account of foul water. Stagnant water in yards or pastures is a constant source of danger.

Cleanliness, warmth, and dryness in sleeping quarters is a Pervier precept. He compels them to sleep in small hunches, and permits no cold draughts. He prefers the ground for a floor, and so do the hogs; but frequent recoating with sand is advisable, and little hedging must be used, as hogs should never be allowed to sleep where they come out steaming and sweating. Bedding should be changed at least once a week. In summer hogs are kept out of the sheds and on pasture.

Experience has convinced Mr. Pervier that it is most profitable to market as fast as the animals are ready, either in car or wagon loads, and he never holds those in prime condition for the others. He prefers not to sell all his hogs at one time, unless the market is very high.

stock yards for the past twenty years are well aware of the great changes that have occurred in the general character of the animals brought into the market. Without exception the stock that have been the record breakers in height of quality, and have, consequently, returned the greatest profits to their owners, have been those that have had liberal sprinklings of pure-bred, registered stock. The farmer and ranger should select the pure-bred or high-grade animal because he is invariably the one with the least waste, and heaviest in those parts that bring the best prices.

How to Clean a Carriage.

Don't use ammonia. It cracks varnish and fades the colors both of painting and lining. A carriage should never, under any circumstances, be put away dirty. In washing a carriage, keep out of the sun, and have the lever end of the "setts" covered with leather. Use plenty of water, which apply, where practical, with a hose or syringe, taking care that the water is not driven into the body, to the injury of the lining. When forced water is not attainable, use for the body a large, soft sponge. This, when saturated, squeeze over the panels, and by the flow-down of the water the dirt will soften and harmlessly run off. Then finish with a soft chamois leather and oil silk handkerchief. The same remarks apply to the under works and wheels, except that, when the mud is well soaked, a soft mop, free from any hard substance in the head, may be used. Never use a "spoke brush," which, in conjunction with the grit from the road, acts like sandpaper on the varnish, scratching it, and, of course, effecting

Keeping pigs in good appetite is essential, and keeping corn constantly before them is injurious to digestion. Grass is the cheapest and best food to balance corn, and hogs should have plenty of it; but the bare pasture so common in the corn belt is little better than none. In the fall pumpkins are fed liberally, regulating the digestive system and promoting rapid growth of flesh. Mr. Pervier uses milk, clover, and other feeds, and considers the use of succulent food all through the winter necessary to success. Rye is good, but clover has given him the best results.

Hogs on feed should make a gain of one pound each day. Mr. Pervier's books show that, since 1886, he has beaten this average. In twelve years he has steadily increased the gain from twenty and one-half to thirty-three pounds per month. Weights from 250 to 300 pounds have given him the most profit and been the best sellers. One bushel of corn should, he says, make ten pounds of pork; and if that much meat sells for the price of a bushel of corn, feeding hogs will pay. At the Illinois experiment station, on grass and corn, seven to sixteen pounds of gain have been made to the bushel; but ten pounds may be taken as the basis of gain. He advocates the liberal use of wood ashes for bone making, large and strong development of bone being essential.

Mr. Pervier says there is no cure for cholera, but much preventative. All disease can be resisted by clean water, food, and sleeping quarters, and the hog should be kept as clean as any other animal. He keeps his feeding floors scrupulously clean, believing filth taken into the stomach retards digestion.

"I saw a neighbor throwing corn into the mud for his hogs not long ago," he said, "and remonstrated with him."

This year Mr. Pervier has met with considerable success in growing forage crops for use during the wet season, when pastures were dry. Rape gave good results, standing the drought well, and green oats helped him out; but the hogs always preferred blue grass when they could get it. This is but a brief narrative of the Pervier method, distinctive features of which are the use only of young sows for breeding, marketing them after the first litter; cleanliness in feed, water, and quarters; attention to the comfort of the animal; and the liberal use of grass and clover, to balance the corn ration. Every word of it is worth the perusal and reflection of hog men, as it is the experience of a painstaking, intelligent, and, better than all, successful man.

Market Demands High Quality.

Because in the use of high-grade or pure-bred stock of the proper breeding, type, and form the breeder will secure the quality that has been in the course of actual development for the past century, with definite ideas in view toward fixed ends.

Because it is a well-known fact that one can not afford either the time or money to bring up the native to the standard of quality that the high-grade markets demand, with any other means than by the liberal introduction of pure blood.

Because, with the competition that is now existing and will continue to exist, varying only as it increases in intensity, the farmer, ranger, and feeder can not afford to handle any kind of fatting stock that will not return to him the greatest profit in the shortest possible space of time for the feeding stuffs used in fitting for market.

The stock men who have been familiar with the ally removing all gloss. Never allow water to dry itself on the carriage, as it invariably leaves a stain. Be careful to grease the bearings of the fore carriage so as to allow it to run freely.

Shipping Poultry.

There are a few general points in regard to shipping poultry that are applicable to all markets: shippers should see that the coops are in good condition before using, so that they are not liable to come apart in transit, as they are roughly handled sometimes. The coops should also be high enough to stand up in. Low coops should not be used, as it is not only cruel, but a great deal of poultry is lost every year by suffocation. In shipping hens and roosters, they should be kept separate. Nothing depreciates the value of a fine coop of hens so much as to have a number of old cocks with them. Shippers often wonder why they do not get the highest market price for their stock; in most cases this is the reason. Good stock always commands a quick sale at best prices. Poultry should be shipped so as to arrive on the market from Tuesday to Friday. Receipts generally increase toward the end of the week, and there is enough carried-over stock on hand Saturday to supply the demand. Merchants, rather than carry stock over Sunday, will sell at a sacrifice, as the stock, when in coops, loses considerable in weight and shrinkage, and does not appear fresh and bright. Besides, Monday is usually a poor day to sell poultry.

A Hereford is Champion.

The grand championship of all breeds in the fat cattle division of the International Live Stock Exposition, just closed at Chicago, was won by a Hereford.

"The Woods Principal" calved Oct. 17, 1899, and, weighing 1,645 pounds, took the blue ribbon amidst enthusiasm. He is the property of George P. Henry, of Goodenow, Ill., and credit for his fitting is due to John Sotham, the herdmaster. James Peter, the noted English livestock authority, made the award.

"Advance furnished us with a good model last year," remarked Mr. Latham, when showered with congratulations.

The competitors of the champion were Empress Demask, calved April 25, 1899, and weighing 1,450 pounds, and Tip Top, calved Dec. 26, 1900, and weighing 925 pounds.

Empress Demask was made the reserve animal by Mr. Peter, and Tip Top was highly commended. The winner is a magnificent specimen of the Hereford breed; the others are both pure bred Aberdeen-Angus.

The Woods Principal was sired by Pride of Evergreen, 51,882, his dam being Pretty Face Second, 41,063.

Empress Demask was sired by Emulus, of Keiller Park, 26,280, dam Lady Damask, 17,418. She is the property of Collin Dysart, Nachusa, Ill.

Tip Top was sired by He's a Star, 31,370; dam, Folly of M. B., 29,672. He is the property of S. Bradfute & Son, Cedarville, Ohio.

The Woods Principal is a thicker-fleshed animal than Advance, the Pierce steer which was the champion last year. John Latham, who fitted him, says he learned a lot by the object lesson furnished by Advance, and devoted all his efforts to eclipsing the doddly performance of last year.

Suppressed excitement was noticeable in the ring long before the three champions of the several ages entered. Many of the most noted cattlemen of the country watched Judge Peters closely. He was not long in reaching a determination, and when Superintendent Sotham made the announcement, cheers rent the air.

Over his own signature Judge Peter made this statement, which was read to the assemblage by Mr. Sotham:—

"These three animals are the best I ever had the honor of standing over. I have made my decision on the decisive uniformity, weight, and wealth of flesh, the champion being six months younger than the reserve animal and 215 pounds heavier. It is unfortunate that three such magnificent animals should be required to compete for one ribbon."

Superintendent Sotham could not conceal his gratification over such a conspicuous Hereford victory, and made a little talk, in which he said:—

"We all desire to express our esteem for Mr. James Peter, the English authority, who won a place in our hearts by his first decision. In that class he had all three breeds represented in the first four animals, and, by sticking to his type, won admiration. We Americans think sometimes that we excel the whole world, but we must remember that in Great Britain they have been breeding their cattle for hundreds of years; and when we get a gentleman of Mr. Peter's intelligence and experience to cross the Atlantic and teach us something, we should feel and express our gratification."

Cheers were then given for Judge Peter and John Sotham, the fitter of the grand champion steer of the International Exposition of 1901.

Profit in a Small Poultry Yard.

Fortunes need not be warranted or expected in the poultry business, even though we read of immense poultry farms and dazzling incomes, says an exchange. Suffice it for us that a small poultry yard can be made a source of profit; and, if so, why not have one? For this purpose a costly fowl house would be a waste. Any small room will do for a start, if fitted up with perches, nests, doors, windows, and runs, all of which can be made by the party himself, with but little outlay for material. The stock to be placed therein should be selected with a view as to which particular quality may be most desired, and in fancy breeds can be found any desirable quality developed to a marked degree, such as rapid development, great egg production, fine table qualities, or all combined in a lesser degree; and in these times they can be procured at prices within the reach of all. In such quarters, if personal attention is given them as to feeding, and if their requirements as to water, green feed, gravel, etc., are supplied, twelve fowls can be kept on the scraps and waste from an ordinary kitchen, with but a trifling expense for an occasional feed of grain. How much will they return? Eleven hens ought to lay 100 eggs each in one year. At 20 cents per dozen, their eggs would be worth about $18.36. In addition to this, one or two broods can be reared to replenish the old stock, and the surplus to be used on the table, worth from $5.00 to $10, according to the circumstances connected with each individual.

It will be seen by the foregoing that, at no outside expense nominally, after the first start, eleven fowls will return to their owner over $2.00 each per year, at no fanciful estimate, and $24 is equal to more than a month's wages for an ordinary laborer, deducting the cost of his board, or adds nearly one-twelfth to his yearly income. If more fowls are kept, the expenses will increase, as extra feed must be purchased for them. In addition to the cash value of this product may be added the luxury of having new-laid eggs for home use, and at times almost unattainable elsewhere, which should be prized.

A New Breed.

Charles Goodnight, of Goodnight, Texas, one of the best-known ranchmen and feeders in the Panhandle of Texas, has been working with a view of evolving a new and distinct breed of cattle—one that will be proof against blackleg and splenic fever. Mr. Goodnight is thoroughly familiar with the buffalo and its habits, and owns one of the two herds now in existence. He has been engaged in producing a mixture of buffalo and cattle that will reproduce itself, and has met with partial success.

Dr. Victor A. Norgaard, chief of the pathological division, bureau of animal industry of the department of agriculture, has traveled extensively in Texas and the southwest, and is fully cognizant of the evils of blackleg and splenic fever, and the consequent losses from these diseases. Dr. Norgaard has conducted numerous experiments in Texas, and is in hearty accord with Mr. Goodnight's efforts. Mr. Goodnight speaks of his efforts as follows:—

"I have been satisfied for the last ten years that the buffaloes are not susceptible to blackleg, but have not felt disposed to give it to the world as a whole, as it may yet develop. I was among the wild buffaloes for several years, where they were immensely numerous, and many thousands were of the proper age to take it. I have now been breeding them about twenty years, and I am quite positive no case of blackleg occurred during that time, and up to this writing it holds good to those that are one-fourth blood. I will this year have several head of calves only one-eighth blood, and I shall give them every chance to take blackleg, in order to test them, although I think they are immune. I have been trying for several years to establish a race of cattle from the buffalo. So far I have only partially succeeded. When this is done, it will be the greatest thing for the cattle industry of America. They have some characteristics that are very valuable to this interest. Besides their great weight and the extra quality of meat, they are, first, most probably immune from blackleg; second, they never eat loco; third, they never lie with their backs downhill, which causes much loss in weak cattle; fourth, they do not go in hog holes; fifth, they have the greatest lungs of any animal on earth; sixth, they put on more flesh for what they eat than any other animals."

The Farmer's Team.

The team is the most important part of a farmer's equipment. However intelligent his management may be; however skilful he may be in carrying out his plans; however good his machinery, unless he has a capable team to operate the machinery, to fit the soil, to sow the seed, to harvest the crop, he can not attain the highest degree of success. This becomes true to a greater extent with every invention or improvement of farm machinery enabling the farmer to apply horse power to work formerly done by man power. Once the horse furnished the power for transportation and man furnished the power for farming, but now the horse's chief use is on the farm and the farmer's work is largely driving a team.

There are certain characteristics that belong to good horses—farm horses and all others—constitution, easiness of keeping, gentleness of disposition, action, etc. Every one who has driven a team knows that much better work can be done, with greater ease to driver and team and less loss from breakage of machinery, with an easily-managed team than with one that is vicious or fretful. The farmer and his horse are collaborators, and unless they can work together, each doing his part faithfully and willingly, and each enjoying the company of the other, some of the profit and much of the pleasure that ought to result from the labor will be lost. Action, too, is a very important quality for the farm horse, as well as for the roadster. In fact, no horse has any business to be alive unless he has reasonably good action. A farmer can do a much better job of work with the rapid, steady-walking team than with the slow, poking, weaving-gaited slug-gards. A better furrow is turned in plowing, more clods are broken in harrowing, more weeds are killed in cultivating, with the rapid walker. In addition to this, the time saved is a great item. In seasons of pressing work and uncertain weather the fast walkers are of immensely more value than the slow ones.

By the purchase of Sunland Belle 2:08½, John H. Shults now has ten mares with records of 2:10 or better.

ASTHMA CURE FREE!

Asthmalene Brings Instant Relief and Permanent
Cure in All Cases.

Sent Absolutely Free on Receipt of Postal.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. WELLS, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-size bottle."

We want to send to every sufferer a trial treatment of Asthmalene, similar to the one that cured Mr. Wells. We'll send it by mail POSTPAID, ABSOLUTELY FREE OF CHARGE, to any sufferer who will write for it, even on a postal. Never mind, though you are despairing, however bad your case, Asthmalene will relieve and cure. The worse your case, the more glad we are to send it. Do not delay. Write at once, addressing DR. TAFT BROS.' MEDICINE CO., 79 East 130th St., N. Y. City. Sold by all Druggists.

Will Be Raced in 1902.

"Farmer" Bunch is making preparations to go through the circuit next season with a string that will keep him right up in the front of every race he starts in if they get the tracks in good condition. The Farmer always had a "hankering" for the fast classes when making his entries and a habit of winning heats in the green classes in free-for-all time, and is already figuring on beating all his former records.

In the string that he will campaign will be that wonderfully fast mare Much Better 2:07½ by Charles Derby 2:20 that came out in 1898 and took her record that year as a four year old at Santa Rosa, where she won three races in one week, getting a mark of 2:07½ in the second heat of the second race, and 2:07½ in the first heat of the last one. Later in the year she got off and did not make a good showing, although she won two races at the State Fair.

She was bred to Boodle in 1900 and her foal which has just been weaned and is an extra good looking youngster, is called Marconi after the inventor of the wireless telegraphy system. She was bred to Iran Alto this year and will foal early in February or March. Mr. Bunch will begin jogging her soon after and expects to put her in regular training by the first of June and has no doubt but he can lower her record in the fall. Much Better is one of the best bred mares in the 2:10 list. Her sire, Chas. Derby, though a comparatively young horse, has three representatives in the 2:10 list and her grandsire Steinway has four. Much Better's dam, None Better 2:23½, is also the dam of Little Better 2:11½, and is by Allandorf 2:19½, son of the great sire Onward and the wonderful broodmare Alma Mater. Allandorf is the sire of two 2:10 performers, and Onward has nine in this exclusive list. The second dam of Much Better is Bashaw Belle, dam of Strong Boy 2:11½ and three others in the list and granddam of Manager 2:06½ and four others. She is by Bashaw 50, a great producing representative of the Black Hawk family and a grandson of the Chas. Kent mare that produced Hambletonian 10, founder of the greatest American trotting family. Much Better has demonstrated that she has free for all speed and if in proper shape when she starts next year a mark below 2:05 is within her reach.

Another member of the Bunch string that will be expected to lower his record after a year's retirement is Iran Alto 2:12½. His present record was made in 1899 when he was seven years old. His owner, James W. Rea, as well as his trainer Mr. Bunch, are confident that Iran Alto can get a record of 2:10 or better, and knowing his great speed believe the record should be given him before he is finally retired to the stud. He is in better shape now than ever in his life, and as handsome a horse as there is in the country.

The champion four year old trotting gelding of 1901, Thomas R. 2:15, will also be a member of the Vendome Farm string and he will be a 2:10 performer for Iran Alto with ordinary luck. With three horses, all capable of heats in 2:10 or better, "Farmer" Bunch will have entries for all the fast classes, while his string of green trotters and pacers, which he proposes to get together early in the season will contain some excellent prospects.

Onward Gaining Ground.

The race for the honor of being known as the greatest living sire this season is very close between those two great sons of George Wilkes, Onward and Red Wilkes, with the advantage on the side of Onward from present reports which show him to be the sire of 159 standard performers to 158 by Red Wilkes, says Horse World. Both of these great horses are out of daughters of Mambrino Chief, and they were foaled and kept most of their lives in close proximity. During their earlier years the race for fame between them was close, but as a rule Red Wilkes was the general favorite. During the last few years Onward has gained ground, and the great showing he got made on the turf this year has caused many who heretofore have not regarded his family with extreme favor to revise their opinions. It probably will be a long time before one sire will again be represented by six better performers than represented Onward this year. Onward Silver 2:08 Cornolia Belle 2:10, Gracie Onward 2:12, Eva Dee 2:12½, all trotters, and the pacers, Major Mason 2:09½ and Star Onward 2:15½. The six won a very large amount of money during the season, and to-day Onward stands higher in the estimation of the public than he has ever stood since he first began to be prominent as a sire.

With speedy trotters and pacers going abroad and trainers being engaged by foreign owners, it is only a question of time when we will have an international trotting meeting.

The October, 1901, meeting of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders Association noted the organization of 1900.

Sandy---One of the Regulars.

There is hardly a trotting-horse man who has been on the leading tracks of America who does not know "Sandy" Smith, the plunger. Sandy was brought up with horses, and has had his hands on more record breakers than any man in America. He came out to California in 1879 with Monroe Salisbury and has been with the trotters ever since. He took care of Jay-Eye-See when he made his trotting record of 2:10, has worked for Marvin, Hickok, Keating and others, and knows every prominent trainer and owner in the business. His first experience in the horse line was with old man Lowell, who owned American Girl, and he learned much about taking care of a horse then and has learned a great deal since, so that now he is one of the best men in the country to condition a trotter or do one up after a race. Sandy can tell many interesting stories of his experiences on the Grand Circuit and of the big bets he has seen made. He bought a pool at Lexington in 1900 on Boralma, paying $1200 for first choice, and auctioneer Herdick announced that it was the biggest pool ever purchased by a man that rubs horses.

Sandy got his title of "The Plunger" from the fact that he often plays his whole war on his choice, whether it be much or little. A Californian who was in Lexington last year at the meeting of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders Association had occasion to ask for change for a $100 bill. He walked up to a crowd of millionaires who were present and with the bill in his fingers asked if any one could change it. Sandy was standing near, and having heard the request pulled out a roll of bills that was as big, according to the Californian's story, as the calf of his leg, and skinning off five twenties made the change. The Californian was accommodated, but he hasn't got over his surprise yet. Sandy has everybody on the Grand Circuit "sized up" as far as their abilities go, and here are some of his opinions:

Thos. W. Lawson—"The gamest man that ever got into the business, and I'll bet those copper follers will never be able to down him. Why, the amount of money he gives to charity every year would make them go to bed for a week if they lost it."

Harry K. Devereux—"Never bets, but one of the best drivers in the United States. He has a whole lot of professionals skinned when it comes to driving."

Nick Hubinger—"When that gentleman thinks he has a chance I don't know of anything that can stop him. He can have fifty thousand dollars up in the pool-box on a race and look as cool as a cucumber."

Mr. E. E. Smathers of New York—"He loves a trotting horse and loves to drive a fast one himself, but I think he enjoys having a good big bet down more than either."

Ed Geers—"A great general in a race and I think he could sit still driving a colt through Chinatown when they were celebrating the China new year with firecrackers."

Vance Nuckols—"A young trainer who will be reckoned among the very best drivers in America before long. One of the best reinsmen I ever saw, and knows how to put a horse in shape and get him going square."

W. L. Snow—"As good a driver as any of them, and a mighty good judge of a horse. Will pay the price when the horse suits him, but can walk away and never feel a bit sorry when asked a figure that he thinks is too much."

Sandy came back from his trip over the Grand Circuit last fall wearing diamonds, but he is going to work soon on the horses at Aptos Farm that Mr. A. B. Spreckels will send to the Cleveland sale in May. There is not a man in this country who can give horses better care or closer attention than he, and when horses are in his charge they are always in fine shape.

The feet of horses differ much in structure and quality. Some have feet that last them without wear to the end of life. Others have feet which almost from birth are a source of trouble to keep them in condition for use without lameness. They are the most important of the different organs for on them comes the severest strain. Some retain their natural toughness and elasticity much longer than others, while the others part with moisture rapidly and unless supplied occasionally by external means they become so powdery and brittle that it is with difficulty a shoe can be kept on them.

The Potter Sale at Los Angeles.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., December 19—The dispersal sale of the stable of M. M. Potter took place at Agricultural Park, this city, to-day. Taking the quality of the stock offered into consideration and in addition the fact that the majority of the youngsters came from the ranch but a week ago and were therefore in but poor shape to show their quality, the sale was probably the best ever held on the Pacific Coast and the equal of any sale of the character held in the East of late years. The star of the sale was the McKinney mare, Sweet Marie, with a trial of 2:12½ and a matinee record of 2:14. At $3150 she went to William Gerland, of Los Angeles, and will be raced through California next season. She looks like the best prospect for the slow trotting classes in sight. Chas. Durfee, owner of McKinney 2:11½, was a bidder up to $3000; T. H. Griffin of Detroit, Mich., bid $3100, but Mr. Gerland's bid captured the mare. Next to Sweet Marie, the three year old filly Sweetheart by Butler's Bashaw brought the highest figure, $1500, going to Mr. Earl of this city. Two days before the sale she went a half in public in 1:05, last quarter in 30½ seconds. The sale was held under the management of E. J. Tranter of Buffalo, N. Y. It requires pretty smooth work to start out in the spring with a fast trotter or pacer, win enough money with him to pay expenses and return home without a record. A number of men try this game each season, and, while a few succeed, the majority slip up on the proposition. Someone is certain to make trouble for such a horse before he has gone many races; he is liable to get a heat while the driver is napping, or the driver may get into trouble for not driving to win. The best way to do is to not enter the horse through a circuit until ready to win with him—Western Horseman.

HIDALGO'S GOSSIP.

NASHVILLE, Dec. 16, 1901.

I have been here a week and most of it in the midst of genuine blizzard weather. Over in Kentucky it was clear and cold, but nothing like this. My wife and I spent three days in Lexington as guests of General John B. Ewing, the owner of Topgallant, as genial a gentleman "as ever came over the pike," as they say in this end of the world. On Friday, the 6th, he took us out to Castleton, Mr. James R. Keene's farm, where that splendid old Virginia gentleman, Major Foxhall Daingerfield did the honors as he alone can do. The Major resided in Shasta county in early days, as also did two of his brothers. Lee Daingerfield had a ferry across the Sacramento about the mouth of Battle Creek; and William P. Daingerfield succeeded Jesse Pitzer as Superior Judge of Shasta county. He afterward removed to San Francisco, where he was the only Democratic judge on the bench for a long time. Mr. Keene has been breeding horses in Kentucky for some years and has had Major Daingerfield as his superintendent—the right man in the right place. He gave us a parade of stallions after lunch that was a whole horse show in itself—St. Leonards, imp. Horoscope, Ben Brush, Commando, Kingston and one other that I have forgotten. In Kingston I saw all I expected to see—a handsome brown horse on short legs and with the greatest driving power any horse has had since the days of Vespasian. St. Leonards is, beyond all comparison, the finest looking son of St. Blaise. He has all the quality of Magnet and is a good deal larger horse. Horoscope is young and untried, but a very pretty chestnut and the Major is very fond of him. Commando is a giant and will probably reach seventeen hands by the time that he completes his growth. Ben Brush was the agreeable disappointment of the lot. I have always had him described to me as a very strong little horse, but rough and lacking in quality. Nothing could be much further from the truth for, in his stallion form, he has rounded into the most classic lines. My belief is that Mr. Keene has, in St. Leonards the best Touchstone horse in America; and in Kingston, the best Melbourne horse in the world.

On the following day we went over to Mr. August Belmont's place and saw Hastings, whom I declared a better horse than any of the Matchem line in England; Magnetizer, a well-worn son of The Ill Used, and Octagon, who is believed to be the best son of Rayon d'Or. I looked him all over and never saw a horse better balanced, in addition to which, fact, it should be stated that he is a horse of good temper, which is rare in that family. Henry of Navarre, long and low, completed the quartette and he is certainly as beautiful a horse as can be seen anywhere in England or France. The farm is in charge of Mr. Kane who entered the employ of the elder Belmont over twenty-five years ago and who used to exercise old Preakness before he went to England to walk over for the Brighton Cup. That afternoon I spent with General Ewing at his own farm, at one time owned by John Morgan, the famous guerilla chief; and the next day (Sunday) we were the guests of Col. Milton Young, at McGrathiana. But I have so much to say about that place that I must defer it until my next letter.

I reached the city of Andrew Jackson at 8 o'clock in the evening, in the midst of a copious downpour and, on the day following, accompanied Mr. E. S. Gardner, Jr., on a trip down to Avondale Farm where I saw all his horses. Old Himyar, now at the close of his twenty-sixth year, is the best preserved horse I ever saw. His back is but little swayed with age and he plays about his paddock like a yearling, in spite of his permanent blindness. As I looked at him it occurred to me how singular it was that America had preserved the male lines of Glencoe and Orlando, the cracks of their respective eras while they were wholly extinct in England; and the same is equally true of the male lines of Whisker and Emilius in Australia. Himyar is a horse of singular beauty and it must almost have broken the dear old Major's heart to part with him. Behind the saddle the great sweep of his powerful thighs recalls the immortal Stockwell, but the clean cut neck and expressive head all point to Orlando. Himyar is so far the only stallion that ever got, in America, at least, the winners of over $240,000 in a single season; and with the severe competition that now exists between stallions in this country, it is almost an even bet that the same mark will never again be reached. Iroquois, Longfellow and Sir Modred, each made a magnificent show in the years of his service, but none of them ever touched the $200,000 mark. Judge then, what must be the chance against any other horse equalling the high water mark of sightless old Himyar.

Massetto, the imported son of St. Simon and Lady Abbess came next and a very handsome young horse he is, a rich brown in color and very like St. Simon about the head and neck. As the sire of the consistent Thomas Cat and the ill-fated Tommy Atkins, this lusty young stallion, so full of the vital energy that characterized his noted ancestor Voltigeur, commends himself very readily to admirers of the Black-lock line that has reached supremacy after nearly seventy years of obloquy and neglect. He is not only a horse of more than ordinary beauty but a horse of unusual strength, his back and loins being broad enough for an island. His youngsters all show this feature of conformation in a strongly marked degree. His other stallion, imp. Quicklime, I did not see. The weanlings at Avondale are a choice lot, all looking rugged and healthy. There are half-brothers and half-sisters to such celebrities as White Frost, Bangle, Soufle and a dozen others of his big money winners in the past season.

The mares in Mr. Gardner's paddocks are more remarkable for size and good looks than for numbers. He breeds on the same plan as the late John M. Clay and prefers a select lot of horses to an enormous big hord of nothings. In this respect, he affords a striking contrast to Mr. Haggin, who is buying stallions by the shipload without reference to anything but relationship. I never saw as few really meritorious stallions in a dozen head as I saw at Elmendorf. High Order is a good looking horse and so is Juvenal with his Blair Athol markings. Rapallo is a good looking horse and I like Arkell (by Arklow, brother to Ormonde) better than most people do. But the best looking horse of the entire outfit is Kinley Mack, the only duplicator of the Brooklyn and Suburban. As for that marvelous galloping machine, Ben Holladay, I should think twice before breeding to him at $10 the season. Avondale is a small farm, well arranged and all its details most admirably systematized; and I trust Mr. Gardner will be in no hurry to increase its dimensions.

It was a bitter cold, sleety day last Saturday when General Jackson sent in his carriage to drive my wife and me out to historical Belle Meade. But "the cheerful hearth's gleam made sadness a stranger" as the battle-scarred veteran met us at the door and welcomed us with that cordiality that is part and parcel of his nature. The storm raged without, but all was comfort and geniality within. Belle Meade is the oldest organized breeding farm in America, founded in 1807 by John Harding, father of General William Green Harding, one of whose daughters married General Jackson, while her sister became the wife of his brother, the late Judge Howell E. Jackson, of the United States Supreme Court. John Harding reclaimed some of this land from its canebrake condition and, as William came up, he carried on the good work. As the condition of the place gradually became improved, General William G. Harding erected the magnificent old mansion that has defied the storms of nearly seventy winters. The storm lulled for about half an hour and we went out for a look at the stallions. First, we came to Longstreet, the marvellous campaigner of the past decade. How good a racehorse he was no one can exactly tell, but, taking Tenny as a trial horse between them, I must always believe him to have been the superior of Salvator, because the latter had all he could do to beat Tenny a head or a neck, while Longstreet invariably beat him two lengths and upwards. Nor can they say it was because Tenny had grown stale, because he won the Brooklyn Handicap after Salvator had retired from the turf forever. The next horse shown was imp. Tithonus, a very good looking son of St. Simon. The first of his get appeared during this past season. Next came dear old Luke Blackburn, swayed down with his twenty-four years and looking a good deal more like Lexington than Bonnie Scotland. After him came the beauty horse, Inspector B., the handsomest horse on the farm, if not in all America. He is a worthy son of a worthy sire; and I really believe the get of Enquirer won more races than that of any other stallion, native or imported. Next was The Commoner by Hanover, a magnificent chestnut and about as strong a horse as one would wish to see. He caught my wife's eye more than any of the rest. After him came that neat looking little English gentleman, Madison by Hampton, a trifle on the small order but with no end of quality. Next was imp. Loyalist, brother to Paradox, who won the Two Thousand Guineas and Grand Prix de Paris; and the procession was wound up by Mont d'Or, a good looking son of Rayon d'Or, who was a head and shoulders the best three year old of 1879. The stallions were all in their winter coats and looked rugged and healthy. After inspecting them, we returned to the magnificent old home and sat down to such a luncheon as only Belle Meade can furnish.

The yearlings and weanlings we saw after lunch and they certainly were a choice lot. The yearlings embrace the last of the get of the Derby winner Iroquois, and Mr. W. H. Jackson, Jr., is now baying them prepared for the spring campaign by Henry Gerbardy, at one time a popular western jockey. They are all in good health and most of them have already shown plenty of speed. I forgot to mention Huron (brother to G. W. Johnson, sire of Lieutenant Gibson) in my enumeration of the Belle Meade sires, I like better than any Iroquois horse I have yet seen. He has all the muscular power of his sire but is a longer bodied horse for his height and breeds a more substantial type of horses. In color he is a beautiful brown and as intelligent looking a horse as one could wish to see. There were 36 weanlings in the barn and only two of the lot that could be deemed undersized. All were gifted with plenty of bone and excellent feet. It would not astonish me to hear that the General got the old time Bonnie Scotland and Iroquois prices for these youngsters at his next sale.

Five o'clock came and the carriage came up to the door to take us hack to town. In a voice tremulous with emotion, the kindly master of Belle Meade bid us goodbye and exacted a promise from us not to wait another fifteen years without coming around to see him. The trusty old darkey on the box clucked to his horses and the magnificent bays dashed forward into the darkness, leaving behind us the sweetest old home and the most genial host in all the sunny South.

Song of the Horse.

The swiftest trolley often slips the wire,
An automobile balks before the hills,
The bicycle drops, faint, with wilted tire;
Your engines hurt and send a shock that kills.
I have a patience and a human will;
I have gone man's gait since centaur days;
I have borne him where war's mighty thunders thrill;
I share the toil where he the furrow lays.

With my sniffling and my whinny and my neigh
I can answer to the very soul of man;
In peace his mate before old Pharaoh's day,
In war his comrade since the world began.

When the bugle calls the charge in battle line;
When my saddle-girth is tightened till it cracks,
When I champ the bit and dodge the bullet's whine
And my iron heels prick deep in restless tracks,
Like the tempest driving ocean on the rocks—
With a hurricane of hoofs along the field,
When the flashing sabres cross in awful shocks,
I am Mars himself, with mighty spear and shield.

Oh, my leaping, dashing, stamping, rearing bounds
Till my sweaty sides are flecked with snowy foam,
Then I prance where e'er the victor's trumpet sounds,
Or slowly take an empty saddle home.

When ten thousand eyes are straining at the race,
When the jockey swings in rhythm as I leap;
When like steel my muscles spring with easy grace,
And the landscape speeds away as on we sweep;
When it's neck and neck as down the stretch we rush,
And the riders clutch the mane and ply the lash;
When o'er the grand stand falls a sudden hush,
Till the winner's name is shouted like a crash.

Oh, the glowing, panting, eager, throbbing goal!
Oh, the struggle? Oh, the joy to win the goal!
I'm a thousand chariot races joined in one,
I'm all that ever thrilled a sportsman's soul.

Let the automobiles whirl past prince's gates;
I have carried Caesar through the streets of Rome.
Let your engines rattle past your great war machines;
I have shared the daring Cosack's mountain home.
I'm the spirit of the Arab on the plains,
I'm a part of mighty deeds that kings have done.
In knightly joust and tourney with medieval thanes,
A lady's smile has told my lance has won.

With my prancing and my dancing and my neigh,
I have answered to the very soul of man,
I have gloried in his glory since Creation's day,
I have been his comrade since the world began.

The Moose Killed Off the Horses.

While the peculiar pacing gait of a moose will not carry him over the ground as rapidly as the deer or caribou, his endurance far surpasses that of either of these animals. For a short spurt or in very deep snow the caribou can easily discount the moose, but for an all-day's jaunt, where the course is fairly open, the moose has no rival. Many years ago, when Sir Edmund Head was Governor of the Province of New Brunswick, he owned a tamed moose that performed remarkable feats of speed and endurance. On one occasion the Governor wagered $2500 that his moose could travel from Fredrickton to St. John over the ice, a distance of eighty-four miles, in faster time than any team of horses in the stud of Lord Hill of the Fifty-second Regiment. A sledge was attached to the moose and another to the horses. The river ice was covered with about eight inches of snow. The start was made opposite Government House at 8 o'clock in the morning. In seven hours the moose and his driver were in Market Square, St. John. Lord Hill's team was distanced, one of the horses expiring at Gagetown and the other reaching St. John three hours behind the moose.

And Welch sententiously remarks that "you can't make the races too short to make the betting good." This rather disposes of the fossilized notion that it is necessary to have a long-drawn-out race in order to get a lot of money into the pool box.

THE RUMOR comes from Oregon and Washington that the very successful racing season held in the north this year has attracted the attention of the hookmaking fraternity and that several of the clan will depart for the northern circuit next summer and bid for the privilege of making syndicate books on the races there. Heretofore auction pools and mutuels have been the systems employed to handle betting on the speed contests throughout Oregon and Washington and the race-goers there know little of books. As a consequence the sport is in a very healthy condition in those States. We desire to warn the directors of the fairs and racing associations in the north that they cannot bring racing into disfavor any quicker than by permitting the hookmaking system to be carried on. It will ruin the game just as certain as it is introduced and instead of the fairs being successful and popular they will soon be looked upon as mere gambling places and the better class of citizens will avoid them. Book-making as conducted by the big racing associations in the large cities is an entirely different thing from the syndicate hookmaking at the country fairs. The latter has utterly demoralized harness racing wherever it has been introduced and if our northern friends desire to keep the meetings up to the standard of this year they must keep it from their tracks. It will take the California district fairs a long time to recover from the effects of syndicate hookmaking which has for several years been in vogue here to the almost utter demoralization of harness racing. Oregon and Washington should take heed and profit by our experience.

STAKES, rich and numerous, are advertised in this issue by that sterling organization, the Washington Park Club of Chicago, to close Wednesday, January 15, 1902, for the summer meeting. There are four stakes for three year olds, including the American Derby, which has $20,000 added. For two year olds there are seven stakes in which the added money is from $2000 to $5000. There are also six stakes for horses three years old and upward, the added money being from $2000 to $7500. None of the overnight purses will be less than $500, and the handicaps will be $1000 and upward. Entry blanks can be had at this office, or can be obtained by writing the Secretary, James Howard.

THIRD PAYMENT of ten dollars on the foals of mares bred in 1900 and entered in the Breeders Futurity is due January 2d. This is the last chance to make a substitution in this stake and those whose mares did not foal, or were so unfortunate as to lose the colt, have an opportunity now to transfer their nominations. Those owning foals of 1901 who failed to enter in the stake can secure a few nominations from parties whose foals have died, by sending the amount of the first three payments—$18, to F. W. Kelley, Secretary, 36 Geary street, San Francisco, on or before January 2d.

A PAYMENT OF $25 will be due on New Year's Day on yearlings in the California Futurity. This stake, which will be a very valuable one, will be run next December. The new California Jockey Club adds $8750, a respectable stake alone to contest for. It is estimated that its total value will be $20,000. Also on January 1, 1902, is due a payment of $75 on the Western Produce Stakes, to which the California Jockey Club will add the sum of $5000, making it worth $10,000, to be contested in March, 1902. Failure to make these payments will declare the entry, as there are no forfeits.

E. WRIGHT, Secretary of Agricultural District No. 44, Colusa county, writes us that the Colusa association will try to secure a meeting of representatives from all the districts north of Sacramento that dates may be arranged for a northern circuit of fairs this year. Mr. Wright says the intention is to get the circuit started by July if possible. Nearly all the districts have their entire appropriation to use this year and the outlook for good fairs and racing is excellent.

Necessary to Success.

Hon. John W. Springer, President of the National Live Stock Association, said on Tuesday, in an address to the delegates to the fifth annual convention at Chicago:

"I cannot too strongly impress upon every stockman of this Union the necessity for a liberal use of printer's ink; it has made and unmade millions of men. If you expect to take front rank as a breeder of live stock the world must know it, and they will learn it through the show ring and advertisements in the thousands of papers and magazines which encircle the globe. That little, parsimonious, grumbling soul, who is never known beyond his own front gate, or possibly his township, is deserving of little sympathy; he is out-classed; he lives in the wrong age; he is in the same boat with the political leaders who continually harp against everything and everybody. The public usually takes all such at their own word and declines to notice them with commercial transactions or political offices. Cheap men and cheap ideas are too attenuated and circumscribed to even create a ripple upon the business circles of commercial activity. The marked man of our day is a liberal, progressive, wide-awake specimen of American manhood, who lets the world know about it, and the world, in turn, pushes him a little higher up in the scale of higher accomplishments.

"Permit me to again remind the stockmen of America of their increasing obligations to the press of this land for a never ceasing willingness to publish and circulate all valuable information regarding our varied interests. We should all support ungrudgingly not only the city journals, but also the country paper, both of which, as a rule, are too scantily paid for the services they render humanity. The news gatherers, the news circulators and the news publishers are the stockman's friends, and we cannot read too many of their papers, reports, magazines and books."

Half-Mile Races.

HANFORD, December 22, 1901.

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Will you kindly answer a question in your next issue? We have a little sport here at our half-mile track once in a while. We put men in the stand to start and manage the races for us. No purses are hung up, but gate money is charged. Does it or will it give our horses a bar or a record?

Subcriber. If the races are a greater distance than a half-mile horses that win heats will get a bar. If the races are half-mile heats they will get none.

The Rules of Polo.

Four men make up a team in polo, and each player has a specified position allotted to him, as in baseball or football. The names of the positions are No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, and "back." In a game the No. 1 lines up against the "back," the No. 2 against the No. 3, on the other side, and, when properly played, the men should be going in pairs.

The regulation polo field is 950 feet long by 450 feet wide, and on either side of the field a 10-inch board fence keeps the ball from going out of bounds.

At either end of the field the goal posts are located. The posts are 24 feet apart, and should be at least 10 feet high.

The game begins with a throw in at the middle of the field. The referee, who is mounted, stands some distance away from the squad of players, and at the sound of the bell throws the ball in such a manner that both sides should have an even chance for it.

In matches the length of a game is one hour of actual play. This hour is divided into four periods of 15 minutes each, with a rest of seven minutes between periods. After a goal has been made, the players are allowed two minutes before resuming play.

The ball used in polo is made of light wood, is about three and one-eighth inches in diameter, and must not exceed five ounces in weight. For mallets the players use sticks of different lengths, varying from 48 to 53 inches.

The score in polo consists of a goal, which counts one; and the side making the largest number of goals wins the match.

The penalties in polo are a safety, which counts one-quarter of a goal against the side making it, and a foul, which takes off one-half a goal from the score of the offending side. The safety is the same as in football, when a player takes the ball behind his own goal line to prevent the other side from scoring.

For one player to cross another while the latter is on the ball constitutes a foul. To prevent a player from making a stroke, by placing a mallet in the way, is also a foul, and this is what is meant by "hooking mallets."

Each team has a captain, who directs the work of his players on the field, and the captains have the sole right to discuss any questions that may arise during the game.

The officials consist of a referee, timekeeper, scorer, and goal-keepers. The referee's decision is final on all matters of actual play. The goal-keepers signal with a flag every time a score is made. The timekeeper keeps a record of the actual time of play, and he gives signal bells announcing when play shall begin, and when it shall stop.

If the ball is in play when the bell rings at the end of the first period, the teams continue until the ball is put out or a score made. The overtime is deducted from the 15 minutes allotted for the second period, and so on up to the final period, when the bell stops the play at the end of the 15 minutes.

The captains toss for choice of goals, as in football, and after every goal the teams change sides.

When the ball crosses a side line, it is out of bounds, and must be put in play by the referee throwing it between the contestants (lined up as at the beginning of the game) toward the middle of the field, and parallel to the goal lines at the point where it went over the bounds. The ball must be thrown in from outside the boards.

When the ball crosses an end line, it is also out of bounds, and the side defending goal is entitled to a free knock in, the ball being placed on the line at the point where it crossed, but in no case nearer than 10 feet to the goal posts or to the side boards.

The right of way is given to the player who has last hit the ball, or to the player who has entered safety on the line of the ball between it and the last hitter, or (as against players not in possession of the ball) to the player who is following nearer than any other player the line of direction of the ball.

The officers of the polo association believe in eliminating dangerous riding as much as possible, and, with this end in view, the following examples of riding are prohibited: Bumping at an angle dangerous to a player or his pony; zigzagging in front of another player riding at full gallop; pulling across or over a pony's forelegs in such a manner as to risk tripping the pony.

A player shall not strike an adversary or his pony with the hands or mallet.

A player must not put his mallet over his adversary's pony, either in front or behind.

A player may push with his shoulder, provided the elbow be kept close in, but a player can not seize an opponent with the hand, strike or push with the head, arm, or elbow.

If a player requires assistance in the way of getting on a fresh pony or obtaining a new mallet, he must ride to the end or over the side lines, as no person is allowed to come onto the field to assist him.

When a player is replaced by a substitute, he can not return to the team the same day, except to take the place of a player who is disabled or disqualified.

SULKY NOTES.

W. G. Durfee will have Sweet Marie (matinee record 2:14) in his string next year, and as she is eligible to the slow classes should be a good money winner.

Don't fail to make your payments in the Breeder's Futurity stakes. Second payment in the stake for mares bred in 1901, and third payment in the stake for mares bred in 1900, must be paid by January 2d.

A gentleman advertised in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN a month ago for a horse. He received about fifty replies, selected one from the lot and purchased him, and letters are still coming in every day, although the advertisement only appeared twice. It pays to advertise in the B. & S.

Several California horse owners are contemplating making the tour of the Oregon circuit next summer. The big purses offered up there are causing the Californians to turn a yearning look northward, and it need not surprise anyone if the California strings on the northern circuit are numerous.

Babiola is the name of a very handsome five year old bay mare by Charles Derby that will be placed in Ed Lafferty's charge at Pleasanton about January 1st. She was bred and raised at the Oakwood Park Farm and is a splendid trotting prospect, although never having been regularly trained. Her dam is by Anteeo and her second dam by Captain Webster. She is owned by Mr. Umhsen, the well known real estate broker of this city.

Frazier & McLean have sold the promising trotter Dollexa to C. F. White, manager of Grays Harbor Commercial Co., Cosmopolis. Dollexa was bred by Thos. Ronan, Dayton, Wash., sired by Alexis 2:18, son of William L.; first dam Dolly Withers 2:29; by Aberdeen; second dam Annabel by George Wilkes; third dam Jessie Pepper (dam of Iona 2:17½ and Alpha 2:23½) by Mambrino Chief 11.—Portland Rural Spirit.

Ed. Benyon, trainer for the Walnut Hall string of Millionaire L. V. Harkness, thinks he has another Pereno in a bay yearling filly by Moko, dam Chestnut Belle by Red Wilkes. Her dam is the dam of five trotters with records better than 2:30, four having marks better than 2:20. The filly is a full sister to Mobil 2:14. The filly is bred much in the lines of the double Futurity winner, Pereno, both being by the same sire and their second dams being daughters of Governor Sprague.

Mr. M. Henry, of Haywards, owns a very handsome mare by Silver Bow 2:16, first dam Addie S. by Steinway, second dam Aldane by Wissahickon 947, third dam Winthrop Girl by Winthrop 505, fourth dam Arnold mare by Chieftain 721, fifth dam by Billy Wallace. She was bred to Mr. Henry's horse Educator, son of Director, this year and the foal should be worth entering in all the stakes. The combination of Director, Robert McGregor and Steinway blood should result in speed and stamina of a high order.

W. L. Snow, of Hornellsville, New York, who has been in California for the past few weeks, returned home this week. While here Mr. Snow offered $7500 for the pacer Zolock 2:10½ by McKinney, and $3500 for the trotting mare Anzella 2:10½ by Antrim. Both offers were refused. Mr. Snow is one of the best judges of a horse in the country and while he was not prepared to give any more money for these horses than he offered, stated to us that he considered them good prospects in their classes and worth the money he was prepared to give.

Ukiah is to have one of the best half mile tracks on the coast. A local paper states that "for the past ten days ten teams, with wheeled scrapers, have been grading the half mile race track at the fair grounds. Heretofore the track had a fall of ten feet and was very uneven, and the surface was nothing more nor less than a gravel bed. There is now a cut of 3½ feet and a fill of 3 feet being made which will leave only a fall of about 3 feet when the work is completed. A covering of clay will be added, and the turns are being thrown up an inch to the foot. There is no reason why this should not be as fast a track as any half mile track in the state. The owners of the property are leaving nothing undone in making the best improvements and accommodations and should be encouraged in the good work they are doing. A futurity trotting and pacing stake, with ten entries, consisting of foals of Mendocino county mares, recently closed, and is being looked forward to with much interest. It is the intention of the directors to encourage such a stake each year."

"While the light harness horse is now used less for long drives than used to be the case, there is still a brisk demand for cheerful, trappy horses that can road from 10 to 15 miles an hour for from one to three hours. The day for the 100-mile-a-day horse has passed, but there is still a good demand for a roadster that is essentially different from the speed way horse. Such horses are often found among the different trotting families, and there are several branches of the Morgan family still capable of supplying them. At the horse show held in connection with the Pan-American exposition," says the Horse World, "the Morgans headed the light-harness division in point of numbers, and some excellent specimens of this old-fashioned breed were shown. In the matter of size the horses in the Morgan exhibit compared favorably with the other light harness horses, and with their size most of them retained the Morgan characteristics. Some of them are deeply inbred in Morgan blood, and as there are a number of men now breeding Morgans, it should not be difficult to again place the breed in position of prominence, so far as the production of a type of cheerful, enduring roadsters is concerned."

Mr. Fritz Hortsmann, a wealthy gentleman of West-plein, Rotterdam, is making a tour of this country and at present is in California. Mr. Hortsmann is much interested in harness horses and tells us that he saw more high class horses at the New York horse show last month than he could see in Europe in a year. While in California he will visit the Baywood Stud at San Mateo and other breeding farms. Mr. Hortsmann is highly pleased with California and has a very high opinion of California horses.

The speed development of the harness horse in the United States during the last decade is both marvelous and startling, says the American Sportsman. In 1891 the entire 2:10 list, both trotters and pacers, numbered only twelve; seven trotters and five pacers. And today we have a 2:10 list in which are no less than 533, and the stallions represented in this list number 361. Think of this wonderful speed development, all in one decade. Nothing approximating it, in either the human kind or brute creation has ever been made before since Creation's dawn. Is it any wonder that the students of the breeding problem all over the old world are looking for the American product? Had we, as a people, made such a marvelous development physically, we could whip all the armies of Europe in muscular combat.

A queer and unprecedented case which came before the Board of Appeals of the American Trotting Association at Chicago a few days ago was the result of trying to finish a race after dark on the last day of the Grand Circuit meeting at Terre Haute last September. The 2:24 class for trotters was the race in which the mix-up occurred. Prince Selma was played quite heavily in the books for place in the last heat. It was so dark when the horses finished that the judges could not distinguish the horses, and they announced that Red Princess finished in second place, giving Prince Selma fifth place. The bookmakers paid their bets according to the judges' announcement, and left for New Orleans. A number of interested persons set up the claim that Prince Selma was in second place at the finish, and later in the evening the judges called the drivers who were in the race together and found out that Prince Selma really did finish second. The holders of the tickets on Prince Selma asserted that the Terre Haute Association should pay the bets, inasmuch as it was an error on the part of their agents that led the bookmakers to cash the Red Princess tickets, and the matter was carried before the Board of Review, which seems to have decided in favor of the association, as the president declines to pay the tickets.

There are a few axioms which should be pasted in the hat and hung over the fireplace of every breeder of, and dealer in, horses throughout the land, and a portable frame containing these might well form a part of the equipment of every stable, so that its owner could suspend it from the crupper of any animal he chanced to drive, and thus constantly read and ponder at his leisure: "Produce what the public want, or quit the business." "The time to sell is when the other fellow wants to buy." "Business that is not worth advertising is not worth following." "A full grain bin is the best grooming kit." "The most fashionable color is fat." "Grade your goods carefully, and describe them honestly." "Pedigree is pleasing, but performance is imperative." "Deliver at least nine hundred pounds of horse to one thousand pounds of description." "Break your horses, or you will break yourself." These are a few maxims that may come in handy for reference, and he who follows all or any part of them without a slip will go far along the road to adequate return for time and money spent. Advertising is the most generally neglected and despised factor in the horse business, and the most important. No one cares a picayune that ten years ago your farm produced a great horse; the question is, What have you now? Where is it? and where and who are you? If you are satisfied to hunt your hole and pull it in after you, this busy, hustling, hustling old world will tramp over you undisturbed, and your remains will not even be adorned for long with a respectable mound. If you are in the procession, get up near the front where the band plays and you can hear the music, otherwise you may be keeping step and marking time away back in the distance—but not a soul knows it but yourself.

J. L. Hervey, writing in the Chicago Inter Ocean on team trotting says: "Without doubt the greatest pole trotter ever seen in the world was the famous mare Belle Hamlin, one of the first star performers produced at Village Farm, the birthplace of The Abbot 2:03½ and Lord Derby 2:06½. She was a very beautiful mare and of extraordinary speed, but not purely game in a hard race of split heats. Her record of 2:12½ was about her limit as a race mare, but to pole, as an exhibition trotter, she was a nonpareil. Together with Honest George, she holds the world's record of 2:12½, which was made to an old fashioned, high wheeled skeleton wagon. Hitched with Justina, she also trotted in 2:13, while hitched with Globe she trotted in 2:13. None of her mates were near her equals as pole animals, and the best judges always thought that could one have been found to hook with her that possessed her flight of speed and perfect pole manners, they would have beaten 2:10. Team work is a very difficult proposition, and some horses seem born to it, while no amount of education will prove of avail with others. Luck is also a potent factor. Last fall, after the close of the racing season, at one of the Boston matinees, T. W. Lawson's renowned gelding, Boralma 2:07 and John Shepard's fast Senator L. 2:12 were hooked together as an experiment, and Mr. Shepard drove them a mile in 2:12½. This was considered semi-phenomenal, as it was the first mile at speed that they had ever been driven, which seemed to indicate that with a little schooling they would establish a new world's record. The result proved the exact contrary. Every time thereafter they were hooked together and tried, they performed more disappointing and finally the attempt was discontinued in disgust."

Ancient Turf Trickery.

A recent traveler in Eastern Arabia has revived a little of the ancient history of that part of the world, tracing back for many centuries the cause of bitter feeling between two tribes that were at war for forty years, their relations being somewhat strained.

The explorer found that in 562 A. D. the sheikh of one of the tribes made a foray on another tribe and as a ransom for the booty and captives taken he demanded and received a famous horse named Dahis. The extraordinary fleetness of Dahis was the boast of his new owner, and it was not long before a match was made to race him against a Fezara mare belonging to another tribe, and also noted for her fleetness. The wager was for 100 camels, and the length of the course was about ten miles.

As the day fixed for the race approached the horses were kept without water, the plan being that the horse which first plunged its nose into the water through ten miles from the starting point should be declared the winner. The racers were to run riderless, and to make them gallop their best maddening thirst was to take the place of whip and spur.

The superior strength of Dahis told over the yielding sand and he was ahead of his rival, the mare, which, though very fleet, had less staying power. The horse would undoubtedly have won the race if it had not been for a trick perpetrated by the tribe to which the mare belonged. They had concealed a man in a hollow on the track over which the animals were racing, in order to check Dahis and throw him off his course. The trick succeeded and the mare was first at the watering trough.

The dishonest stratagem by which Dahis was defeated came to the knowledge of his owner. After vain efforts to adjust the difficulty, the two tribes resorted to war, and the feud has continued in a mild form to the present day. The war lasted for forty years, and the unpleasantness has been handed down from generation to generation, though long periods sometimes elapse in which there are no active hostilities.

Geo. T. Beckers has received requests from quite a number of breeders in Southern California asking him to bring his horse Zombro 2:11 there for the spring season. There are so many of the youngsters by this horse owned in the southern country showing great speed at the trot, that the demand for Zombro colts is larger than the supply. Many well bred and producing mares are owned in and about Los Angeles and it is probable that Mr. Beckers will comply with the requests and take Zombro to the citrus belt. He will take him to Salem, Oregon, again about the first of June, and will not be able to serve all the mares that owners there desire to book to him.

Records and Bars.

A subscriber of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN asks us for an opinion on the following:

"Will the editor please settle a question by stating what bar a horse gets by going in a race over a three-quarter mile track if he goes the three-quarters in two minutes. Does it give him a bar the same as if he went the full mile?"

JOSEPH DEPOISTER.

This same question has caused more argument in all probability than any one thing in the "Rules and Regulations" of the trotting associations. The rules applicable to the matter are as follows:

RULE 5, SEC. 2. A horse shall not be eligible to start in any race if the time specified has been beaten by him at a greater distance; that is, a horse having made two miles in five minutes shall take a record of 2:30, and be eligible for a 2:30 race, but not for a race limited to horses of a slower class than that.

RULE 43, SEC. 3. Any public race at less distance than one mile, and exceeding a half mile, shall be regarded as irregular, and time made at any such distance shall create a bar.

Under section 2 of rule 5 quoted above, the mare, Janice, that won a heat of one mile and an eighth in 2:24 at Memphis this year was given a record of 2:08½, and while there is no rule which clearly defines a case like the one referred to by our correspondent we suppose the same plan of arriving at the record would be followed. For example, if a horse should trot three-quarters of a mile in two minutes in a public race at that distance he would get a bar of 2:40 as that is the rate of speed at which he was going. In our opinion the claim that he would be barred from all classes slower than 2:00 because he trotted or paced three-quarters in that time is not well taken, but he would get a bar in accordance with the rate of speed at which he trotted or paced and won.

The National and the American trotting associations would do a wise thing if they should enact a rule that would cover the case of a race at over a half mile and under a mile, so that there could be no misunderstanding in regard to the matter.

THE EDITOR.

Death of Stranger.

To be added to the list of great sires that passed away this year with Wilkes Boy, Patron, Stamboul, Adrian Wilkes, Egmont and Quartermaster, is the name of Stranger. He died recently at Kaplanhof farm in Austria. Stranger was bred by Henry N. Smith, during the palmy days of Fashion Farm, and was foaled in 1880. He was the only son of Goldsmith Maid 2:14, and his sire, George Washington, was the only son of Lady Thorne 2:18½. The first of his get to appear on the turf was the filly Myriad, that trotted to a three year old record of 2:28½ in 1888. Most of his life was spent in Kentucky, where a branch of Fashion Farm was kept, and though he was bred to many good mares, he was not a most prolific sire. He was, however, a sire of trotters and of race horses. None of his thirty-three standard performers proved a pacer and with hardly an exception his get possessed extreme courage. The fastest of his family, the stallion Col. Kuser 2:11½, was as courageous a campaigner as the American turf ever saw, and while he lasted was the champion trotter of Europe, in fact, it is doubtful if a better all-around horse ever crossed the ocean. In addition, Stranger sired the noted campaigners Ballona 2:11½, Boodle 2:12½, Cebolla 2:14½, Broomal 2:15, and Hazel Dell 2:15, all of which were noted for their gameness. Of his producing sons Boodle is the sire of Ethel Downs 2:10, Moloch of Roy M. 2:14½, and Nominco of Evolute 2:10½. Of the trotters produced by daughters of Stranger, the filly Eoline 2:14½, is the most noted. When Fashion Farm was closed out Stranger found a new home at Parkville Farm, on Long Island, but had soon to make way for younger and more prolific blood, and thence it was, when his son, Colonel Kuser, was at his best that the sire of the old champion went to Europe.—The Horseman.

Madden's Farm a Model.

Those who visit Hamburg Place, the John E. Madden farm near Lexington this winter, will be struck with an innovation when they go to inspect any of the young things in the paddocks. The astute owner and trainer has done everything in his power to make Hamburg Place the model breeding farm of America, and there are many who will declare that its facilities are unequalled by any farm given up to the breeding of blooded horses.

Acting along these lines, Mr. Madden has caused to be built around his paddocks an up-to-date macadamized road so that it will be possible to drive around the paddocks and see any youngster which may be turned out there without the unpleasant necessity of tramping over wet and often muddy fields.

Secretary Sidney W. Giles writes that the Cleveland Driving Park Company claims the week of July 28th for the 1902 Grand Circuit meeting.

Raced Until December

George Castle of Chicago, finished the season last week with his stable of campaigners, having assisted the harness racing season to die hard in the sunny South, though, according to his narrative, he found it more strenuous than sunny. After the regular season closed at Memphis the Castle outfit went on south to the year's last meeting at various towns in Mississippi, Georgia and Florida, winding up at Bainbridge, Ga., two weeks ago. Mr. Castle speaks in rather complimentary terms of the Southern idea of judging a harness horse race, and also intimates that the officials in these parts seemed to think it the correct thing to invest in pool tickets, and then to see to it that they should be able to cash in.

The most famous battle was fought at Savannah. It lasted through nine soul stirring heats, of which George says he honestly won four with his gelding, Dr. Price, but the local and official money was on Charley Stiles, also from Chicago, and owned by Judson G. Sherman of that city, and Lake Geneva, Wis., and it took nine heats to settle things agreeably to his backers. However, the Castle horses won eight or ten races and a lot of second and third money on the tour, besides which William Mac, 2:05½, covered himself with glory and made his name a monument on the page of Southern rural history by marking a lot of half mile tracks probably for life. An interesting item of news is that Mr. Castle and Eddie Hayward, who has trained for him for a number of years and always driven his horses in such races as he himself did not care to, have parted company. Hayward will train a public stable next season and, as he has made a great showing with the 10-20-30 stable, as the Olympic Theatre aggregation is known along the line, he will probably do well.

The Horseman, in a summary of the Grand Circuit races, says among other things: "The third day saw the most classic event of the Readville meeting raced off. It is known as the Massachusetts, and is for 2:12 trotters. Thus far during the season there had not been an event that was as productive of such great betting as this $10,000 stake. Eleata, the unbeaten four year old, was the favorite. In the first ticket she sold out at $1000, Onward Silver fetching $600, with the rest of the field selling for enough to bring the pool up to $1920. The post odds were: Eleata, $100, field, $75. The final outcome of the race was that Onward Silver won, after five of the most desperately fought heats of the season. Some have given the race to Onward Silver through the superior generalship of Mr. Geers and lack of good judgment on the part of Tom Marsh, who drove Eleata. That Marsh made some mistakes is true, but, as after events showed, the best horse won."

The custom of giving curious and expressive names to race horses was as prevalent one hundred years ago as at present. A book lately issued, entitled "Fashions Now and Then," contains the following notice: At Machynlleth races in 1791 the £50 prize was won by Dr. Evans' horse I'm Quick, beating Mr. Lloyd's chestnut mare Stop Till I Come and Mr. Vincent Evans' horse I'm Done For. This queer selection of names reminds one of the late Lord George Bentinck's notion of one of his stud, "I'll Stop Awhile, Says Slow."

Chilian Saddles and Bridles.

The Chili saddle is a queer affair. In the first place six or seven sheepskins are placed on the horse's back, one on top of the other. A leather strap is passed round these and firmly secured; a skeleton saddle, or, rather, piece of wood with a cantle at each end, is then put on, and on top of this any number of sheepskins, finished off, if the owner is a "swell," by a fox-skin or other valuable fur. Sometimes seventeen or eighteen skins may go to make up a saddle. The four corners are kept down by broad leather straps, ornamented with silver huckles, to enable the rider to wedge himself in. The stirrups are made of two huge pieces of hardwood, with a hole half-way through, and frequently weigh five or six pounds each. The gear of a Chili horse is also one of the most curious looking arrangements in the world. The bit is composed of a long, flat piece of iron which rests on the horse's tongue and against the roof of his mouth; at the end of this is a hole, through which is passed a massive iron ring about four inches in diameter, which encircles the lower jaw; in front of the mouth another flat iron ring is placed to which the reins are fastened. The whole affair weighs about five pounds, and is sufficiently powerful to break a horse's jaw with a sudden jerk. The reins are formed of finely plaited hide, and are about the thickness of a forefinger. There are only two, and they are joined together just above the grip of the hand, they terminate in a lash about four feet long, at the tip of which there is a ball of lead sewn up in leather. When not required for use, this lash is curled round the near side of the rider and hangs down on the off flank of the horse. Of course, as may be readily imagined, it is a formidable weapon in skillful hands; a man not on the lookout is frequently knocked off his saddle by a blow on the head from the ball at the end.

The Use of "Burrs."

The fact that agents of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals found on a number of horses attached to swell carriages, waiting for their owners to come out of the Horse Show in New York last month, the tortuous device known as "burrs" shows how little attention some people pay to the manner in which their coachmen rig their horses. The burr, as those who are not harness dealers or horsemen may need to be told, is a circular leather pad about two and one-half inches in diameter, the inside of which is studded with small bunches of stiff bristles about three-eighths of an inch long, or, in some instances, with nails or screws. The burrs are placed just within the check pieces of the bits with the spiked side next the horse's cheek, or the skin about the corners of his mouth. When the horse moves his head to either side or either rein is drawn upon, the bristles or spikes prick him, and he champs the bit, keeps his head up, and looks "stylish." On no less than a dozen swell pairs of horses were burrs found, one of the teams being owned by Hon. Elbridge T. Gerry, former president of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and another was owned by Oliver H. P. Belmont. It is not likely that either of these gentlemen would knowingly allow their horses to be tortured, but one can be cruel by carelessness as well as design. The use of burrs is an offence under the penal code, and offenders may be prosecuted. In nearly every large city, coachmen may be found using burrs on their horses, for as a rule the average city coachman never hesitates to put a horse's mouth to any kind of torture, if by so doing he can make him appear more stylish and mettlesome.—Horse World.

Fire Commissioner John J. Scannell, whose tastes evidently run to the trotters, has decided to engage in the pastime of breeding and developing trotters on an extensive scale. Some surprise was caused when Mr. Scannell purchased The Abbot for $25,000, and although that great horse was a disappointment during the past season there is every reason to believe that he will be himself again during 1902. To demonstrate that Mr. Scannell is fond of the pursuit and that he is going into it on broad lines the following brief telegram from Middletown is sufficient. "Fire Commissioner John J. Scannell of New York City, accompanied by his secretary, J. Katzenstein, arrived in this city on Monday and has been engaged with local real estate brokers in looking for an Orange County farm which he expects to use for stock raising purposes and training his horses."

Near the close of a journey let the horse walk. If covered with sweat, rub off with a rag to prevent too sudden cooling. Collar galls and bruises are benefited by washing with salt water. Wash the shoulders daily when using the horse.

Like all good things, Jackson's Napa Soda has a dozen counterfeits. Watch out!

Cavalry horses from the West have been placed on government contracts as low as $86, but the more general range is around $115 to $125.

It is said that one of the prize winning saddle horses at the National Horse Show changed hands for $140 two weeks prior to the exhibition.

According to the New York Sun, there are 43,000,000 horses and mules in Europe or more than twice as many as there are in this country.

After spending the holidays in Montana, Joe Rea will return to Lexington and commence training Senator Bailey's horses at the fair grounds.

It has been definitely settled that Boston will have a horse show next year. Col. John E. Thayer will be chairman of the board of directors.

The dams of Shadow Chimes 2:06½, The Monk 2:08½ and Que Allen 2:09½ are all owned in Austria, and all three were bred to Caid 2:07½ this season.

The Park Brew $10,000 Stake for 2:10 pacers will be renewed by the Narragansett Park Association for the Grand Circuit meeting at Providence this year.

Baron Dillon 2:12 is sire of 5 in 2:20 list and 10 with records of 2:14 to 2:28, at 10 years old, out of his only 50 foals two years and over. A remarkable showing.

The report that Shadow Chimes 2:06½ is going to Scotland is incorrect and according to the Buffalo Courier the fast son of Chimes is now owned by Ed Geers.

W. C. Glynn of Clinton, Mass., has lost by death the fast pacing gelding Joe Bailey 2:11½ by Cyclone. He was eight years old and got his record at Lexington, Ky., in 1898.

H. K. Devereux has refused several very flattering offers for the stallion John A. McKerron. The horse will be saved for the race next year for the Boston challenge cup.

Two former champions passed under the hammer at the Fasig-Tipton sale for less than $500. One of them was Mascot 2:04, sold for $350, and Azote 2:04½, that brought $425.

Thomas Lawson's stock farm will be called Dreamworld. The main stable is to be 800 feet long, and has exercising paddocks, covered track and about all that fine horses require.

W. P. Ijams, of Terre Haute, has secured the services of Joe Bruce as trainer, and he now has at the famous four-cornered track sixteen head of two and three year olds, all by Axtell.

In the last five years the Fasig-Tipton Company has sold at its November sales 3726 harness horses, at an average price of $445.92. The average of the last sale was $531.50, the highest of the five years.

The owner of a horse at Newark, O., brought suit for $3000 against the association because the horse was declared distanced the first heat. Over fifty witnesses were examined, and the jury found for the association.

Col. John E. Thayer has again been elected president of the New England Trotting Horse Breeders Association, and thus enters upon his tenth year of service in that capacity. Under his wise direction, assisted by the indefatigable efforts of Secretary Jewett, the Breeders Association has become the most prominent organization of its kind in America, and both men deserve great credit.

Hope So by Blue Bull 75, the dam of Heirloom 2:11½, Strathso 2:13 and Strathbelle 2:14½, also the granddam of Strathmeath 2:10½ and Josephine P. 2:27½, died recently at Delavan, Wis., the property of Phillips Bros.

Ben Keeney has retired to winter quarters and is now looking after the lighthouse near Wheeling, W. Va. Kenney is the only trotting horse trainer in the country who is employed by Uncle Sam as a lighthouse keeper.

C. X. Larrabee purchased Keeler 2:13½ at the Fasig-Tipton sale in New York and will ship him out to his Brook Nook Stock Farm in Montana and place him in the stud. He is the sire of Onoqua 2:08½, Tonita 2:11½ and others.

With the exception of Cresceus 2:02½, Dartmore 2:11½, owned by Walnut Hall Stock Farm, is the fastest trotter by Robert McGregor. He was, however, eighteen in the 2:15 list, trotters and pacers. He is also the sire of the dams of eight in 2:15.

Ed Cogswell is authority for the statement that during the Old Glory sale Eddie Lockwood bet Andy McDowell $250 that he would have a mule that would beat McDowell's mule in the next Transylvania race at Memphis. Cogswell says that each driver posted $100.

Directum 2:05½ reached his Minnesota home in splendid shape, and since his arrival has been jogging about seven miles a day under the intelligent direction of H. C. Hersey. The horse shows evident enjoyment in his work. A number of good mares have already been hooked to him for 1902.

Charles (Doc) Tanner, of Cleveland, has stated that he has been commissioned by five members of the Cleveland Gentlemen's Driving Club to secure horses, the limit to the price of which ranges from $5000 to $25,000, the latter price being that offered by H. M. Hanna for a horse that can win the Boston Challenge Cup.

The report has again been sent out from Boston that Thomas W. Lawson will retire from the turf, devoting his efforts hereafter to breeding and to the show ring. Truth is added to the report by the announcement of his trainer, James Y. Gatch, that he and Scott Hudson have formed a partnership in the training business.

Mountain Boy, Jr., 2:16½, pacing, has the distinction of having started seven times and won seven second moneys the past season, but as his owner, L. S. Bradock, Mount Vernon, Ohio, says, "unfortunately" took a mark of 2:16½, at Columbus, Ohio. He was sired by Mountain Boy, dam Annie Hetzel, by Hetzel's Hambletonian.

Charles W. Maury, who paid $10,300 for Miss Previous and $4600 for her sister Prelates at the late Fasig-Tipton sale, was born in Virginia, and has a fine summer place at Norton, a suburb of Stamford, Conn. He is fond of road driving and there are some good horses in his stable. It is his intention not to start Miss Previous until she is a three year old.

A Lexington special says: "Major B. G. Thomas, the veteran breeder of Domino and other racers, has sold his crack 3 year old trotter Ashbud, by Ashland Wilkes, dam by Aberdeen, to an Italian syndicate for $3,500. The colt has done a trial in 2:19½, and was one of the best in the state this year. He was shipped to New York to-night and will be sent to Italy at once."

Directum 2:05½ has arrived at his new home, the International Stock Farm, and is in splendid condition. H. C. Hersey, who is in charge at the farm, takes extra care of the famous horse and the stallion now gets from five to seven miles jog work every day. It is reported that his book for 1902 is filling rapidly and that when the limit is reached it will be closed regardless of any price offered.

It is said that Secretary Chas. M. Jewett, of the N. E. Breeders' Association, contemplates introducing a resolution at the coming meeting of the stewards of the Grand Circuit, requiring the members to compel each driver to declare and wear colors at the meetings next summer. It would be a grand thing if the stewards would do this. No little thing contributes more to the artistic success of a meeting than the uniform use of colors, and by colors is meant silk caps and jackets.

Keepsake, dam of Tommy Britton 2:06½, has but six living foals, and four have records: Katie Britton 2:25, foaled 1891, by Egotist 2:22½; Tommy Britton 2:06½, foaled 1893, by Liberty Bell 2:24; J. R. Slaughter 2:26½, foaled 1895, by Liberty Bell, and Rose Warren 2:23½, foaled 1896, by Alta Vista. Keepsake is now owned by William Simpson of Empire City Stud, and her other two foals are Keeps (1898), by Prince of India 2:13½, and a filly (1901), by Stately 2:11½, pacing, son of Hummer.

Ed Geers has shipped his stable of campaigners from Buffalo to Memphis, where he will prepare them for their next season's events. In the lot is The Abbot 2:03½, Shadow Chimes 2:06½, The Monk 2:08½, Fred S. Wedgewood 2:08½ and some sixteen promising green material. It was announced at the time Shadow Chimes was sold at the recent Old Glory sale that he was bought by a party in Scotland. That it was a mistake is shown by the fact that Ed Geers now owns the fast side-wheeler.

Because the star matinee trotter of Boston this year, Altro L., did not meet the speedy New York horse, Chain Shot, as was proposed by James Golden, is no reason that a match between the two is off for good, says the Boston Traveler. Golden thought it very foolish to take Altro L. over to New York this fall, as Charles C. Lloyd, owner of Chain Shot, wanted, but has left the matter over till another season, when, if both horses are all right, he will gladly make a match for two races, one to be trotted in New York and the other in Boston.

The new pacer Vase 2:24½ by Vasco is out of Dainty Trot by Black Bashaw, grandam Dame Trot 2:22 by Messenger Duroc, third dam Green Mountain Maid.

Lancelot 2:23, the last foal of Green Mountain Maid, has been sold by Allen Farm, Pittsfield, Mass., to Arthur Koenig, representing Adolf Winkle, of the Kaplanhof Stud Farm of Linz, Austria, and he will be shipped abroad at once. The purchase was due to the fact that several of Lancelot's get have raced with signal success on the Austrian turf. Lancelot is the sire of ten performers to date, including Lyric 2:14½ and Leone, 1, 2:28½, trotting, and Rana 2:11½, pacing. He cost Allen Farm $12,500 as a yearling in 1888, but his export price is private.

At the meeting of the K. T. H. B. A. held last week R. P. Stoll was elected President for the ensuing year; Lucas Broadhead, First Vice-President; Mike Bowerman, Second Vice-President, and H. W. Wilson, Secretary. The Fayette National Bank was made Treasurer. Secretary Wilson was authorized to pay off the remaining portion of the debt of the association, which will leave it clear of all obligations. At a meeting Secretary Wilson was authorized to open the Kentucky Futurity for foals of 1903 for $21,000, the same amount for which the Futurity for foals of the present year was opened.

Gen. Brayton Ives of New York, says that while he did not buy Extasy 2:10½, in the late Old Glory sale for campaigning purposes, yet he will be inclined to start her in a few races next season, particularly if she should prove not to be with foal. Gen. Ives has a farm at Sing Sing on which he has a few mares. A year or so ago he bought the Allerton stallion Keller (3) 2:16½, at one of the Garden sales, and established him in the stud at his farm. Keller is now five years old, and the General contemplates starting him in a few races next season for the purpose of reducing his record.

According to a dispatch from Washington, D. C., Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, taking the cue from President Roosevelt, has introduced a bill to prevent the docking of horses' tails. If this measure becomes a law all owners of docked horses in the District of Columbia must register their horses within ninety days after the passage of the act. It shall be unlawful to bring a docked horse into the District of Columbia, after the measure becomes a law, and all persons owning or driving unregistered docked horses shall be declared guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be liable for a fine of from $100 to $500, or a term of imprisonment.

Gus Macey, known from one end of the Grand Circuit to the other, the man who owned and drove Country Jay 2:10½, through his campaign of this season, has resigned as Mayor of his native town to become a dealer in trotting horses. Macey was elected Mayor of Versailles, Ky., at the November election, but he has had a weakness for Lexington, as he wants to be in the center of the trotting horse world, and he will soon take up his residence in that city. He will sell Country Jay and his other horses and will engage strictly in the business of buying and selling. That Macey will not be seen in the sulky next season his friends doubt, as they do not think that he can resist the temptation to drive when the season opens. Country Jay started 14 times last season and was never worse than second.

Frank G. Hall, treasurer of the New England Trotting Horse Breeders' Association, believes that the engagement of merely paid judges will not relieve the judges' stand from the objections and criticisms so often raised against it. Mr. Hall shrewdly says that the judges, whether paid or otherwise, must have knowledge of the form of the horses and the characteristics of the drivers in order to discharge their duties wisely and efficiently, and that the only way to secure this is to engage judges to commence at the first meeting in a circuit and then follow down the line. There is much weight in this observation, but it does not seem to be expedient, for the reason that many of the associations are unwilling to pay anything at all for the services of their judges.

Horsemen will watch with much interest as to whether Geo. Spear and Lord Derby will nick well or not the coming season. Spear is considered one of the best professional drivers at the present time. Horses that he trains usually come to the wire good mannered. In Lord Derby he has the fastest trotter by the records he has yet trained and at the same time one that has not always been noted for his perfect manners. Mr. Geers, who has had him in charge throughout his racing career, has oftentimes had his hands full to control this fast son of Mambrino King. His fund of resources to keep him on the trot has been taxed to its utmost many times. His new driver will have a fine opportunity to become acquainted with him this winter and spring on the New York speedway, and no doubt when the time comes another season for earnest work, matters will be much simplified by the knowledge they will have gained of each other.

George Ryan advocates registration strongly, and says, in part: "The National and American Associations should open a registration bureau in which every colt bred in trotting lines can be registered for a nominal fee of $2 before six months of age. If registered before twelve months, increase the fee to $5; before becoming a three year old, $25; after that, $50. No horse should be permitted to race on an Association track whose owner cannot show registration papers. By such a plan the breeding interests will be advanced and one great blot on the integrity of the turf obliterated. Some such action must be taken if the harness turf is to maintain the reputation it is entitled to through its connection with such names as Thayer, Forbes, Whitmore, Russell, Jones and Inches, in New England, and men of like character and high personal sense of honor in other sections of the country." —N. Pacific Coast All Age Entries.

The All-Age next month at Santa Maria shows a preponderance of Pointer entries, eleven of this breed as against seven Setter nominations, of these latter six are sons and daughters of Count Gladstone IV., the other Setter being a daughter of Joe Cummings. The above number of dogs will undoubtedly be increased by one or more of the Derby dogs.

The number of dogs in the All-Age Stake of the nineteenth annual meeting of the club is a better showing than we have had in this event for some years past. The quality of the entries is as high class almost as could be wished for by the most intense field trial enthusiast.

As published first in this journal, the intimation that Professor John A. Balmer would accept the invitation extended him to judge the trials, has turned out correct. Mr. Balmer judged the trials at Whidby island, last month with the same conscientious application and satisfaction to the sportsmen in attendance as he had done in the trials of '99 on the same ground.

Reports from Santa Maria are favorable to all conditions in the field requisite for a successful trials. The citizens and sportsmen of the picturesque coast town are all in accord in a strong desire to make the visit of the club members and attending sportsmen an enjoyable one.

A complete list of the All-Age entries is the following:

W. W. Van Arsdale's Pointer dog Dr. Daniels (Plain Sam-Dolly Dec II), whelped May —, 1898.

DOINGS IN DOGDOM.

Newmarket Queen was served by Champion Woodcote Wonder on the 23d inst.

Dr. Lawton purchased a Fox Terrier puppy by Fordham out of Legs and Feet this week.

Two Spot is a young Fox Terrier that should be kept track of by the fancy. He is more than promising.

Woodlawn Kennels sold recently to Irving C. Ackerman a Fox Terrier bitch puppy by Fordham out of Legs and Feet.

Our Boston contemporary is somewhat out of its reckoning. The Oakland show was not a frost nor was the judging by local talent unsatisfactory.

The Boston Terrier ranks were enhanced this week by the arrival of a good one, a crack Eastern bitch in whelp. She was shipped here to Woodlawn Kennels by George Bell, of Toronto.

Mr. Julius P. Smith purchased Irving C. Ackerman's Great Dane St. Leonard at the Oakland show. Mr. Ackerman also sold two Great Dane pups by Lord Loadsbrough Jr. ex Prima Donna to Mr. H. Walterstein and Mr. George Scott respectively.

An announcement from the Gabilan Kennels, Hollister, appears in the kennel advertisements this week. Two likely Fox Terriers are offered for sale at a very reasonable figure. Mrs. Murphy states that she will dispose of all her terriers and devote her attention wholly to Pointers, Setters and Cockers.

A litter of six Pointer puppies by Glenwood, a grandson of Glenbeigh, are now coming on splendidly at the Gabilan Kennels. The youngsters are all beautifully marked. April puppies of the same breeding are now at work on birds. Fred S. Johnson's dog Tick has shown his initial work on quail to N. H. Hickman's gun. John Lucas has Otto Feudner's dog puppy with his string of field trial dogs down at Santa Maria. Lucas believes this young Pointer will become a great field dog. Hip Justins owns one of the bitch puppies. She is domiciled for the present with a litter brother puppy at W. F. McLellan's ranch near Belmont.

An important sale of Greyhounds was consummated a few days ago, J. L. Ross, a well known leashman purchased of Dr. A. T. Leonard four high class coursing dogs. The crack bitch Mayflower, a many time stake winner and dam of several rattling good ones. Herschel's Pride, a good one too, by Persimmon ex Lightfoot. Gameboy by For Freedom ex Mayflower, he a stake winner also, and Fontenoy, of the same breeding, another promising performer. A young puppy by Herschel's Pride ex Mayflower also went with the speedy quartette of grown dogs. The purchase money we are told amounted to $1500. The Doctor has concluded to give up his greyhound kennels. He has let four or five young puppies by Herschel's Pride out of Mayflower at the Woodlawn Kennels for the present.

A lover of dogs can witness nothing more pitiful than the distress of a dog separated from his master in the crowded streets of a large city. The dog shows he is lost: his actions portray faithfully the perturbed state of his mind. He runs hurriedly here and there, stopping at intervals and listening for the familiar whistle or voice. Then comes along the street arab and the customary half-brick. Shortly afterward there is the usual subject for the familiar headline: "Another mad dog." The dog wasn't mad; he was only lost. If owners of dogs, who take those same dogs out into the crowded streets, would only remember that the surest way to find a lost dog is to stand still and let the dog find him there would be fewer lost dogs and fewer mad dog stories for space writers to sharpen their pencils on. A lost dog invariably baunts the spot where he last saw his master, returning again and again to that spot. If you lose your dog, stand still and wait and watch. Your dog will certainly find you, if he is really "lost." But if he has only "missed" you, and knows his way home, he won't come to any harm; he will make his way home, and it won't hurt you, meantime, to stand still for a little while in accordance with the above advice.

A blue rock shoot for turkeys will be held on the Lincoln Club grounds at Alameda Junction to-morrow. Last Sunday the traps were going merrily for a while. Edgar Forster won the first event at 25 targets with a string of 23 breaks. W. H. Seaver scored 20, "Slade" 17 and W. Price 12 targets. The second event was a miss and out, "Slade" cracked 17 clay pigeons and annexed a flat gobbler. Seaver dropped out on his seventeenth target. Forster and Price withdrew earlier in the race. The scores in the third and fourth events were as follows: Seaver 20, 22; "Slade" 21, 20; Price 21, Robertson 20, Forster 23, Seaver 23. Forster won the dinner bird in the third event.

We note the Christmas number of our old and valued contemporary The Shooting Times and British Sportsman on our desk this week. The edition is replete with good stories and elegantly embellished with numerous illustrations.

We acknowledge with thanks the courtesy of Mr. George H. T. Jackson in sending to our sanctum one of the most elegant calendars of the coming year that it has been our pleasure to look upon for many seasons.

A unique and useful holiday novelty in the shape of an imported cut glass office inkstand and penrack is the acceptable souvenir issued by the Bulletin to many of its friends and patrons.

Duck shooting in the bay shore marshes has been splendid recently. Canvasback and bluebill ducks are plentiful on the bay and tributary waters.

A Pointer Study.

A shooter on the Suisun marsh killed besides ducks, geese and English snipe last Sunday, eleven white swans. These birds are not by any means plentiful, we are sorry to hear of their being shot. There is a sentiment and feeling with many shooters that they should be protected.

If a deputy fish commissioner or county game warden would overhaul some of the foreigners on the incoming trains and boats Sunday evenings, not only during the open season, but all through the year, numerous and persistent violations of the game laws and statute protecting song birds would be detected.

Reports from Russian river are indicative that a run of steelhead has been on for two or three weeks. Captain Watson, of Cazadero, who fished the stream for years past, landed a ten pounder one day this week. We do not remember the presence on the river of any large party of local anglers for about three years now.

CARTRIDGE AND SHELL.

The game protection propagandists of this State have frequently used in illustration and argument the happy workings of the Maine game law. In that State it would seem that the game law is one for revenue only. A large force of salaried state officers are employed, and licenses are taken out annually by about 2000 professional guides. The sport there is so circumscribed by legal restraint and regulation that none but the wealthiest sportsmen can take advantage of the hunting and fishing facilities.

The greatest hunting season ever known in Maine has just come to an end. Thousands of sportsmen have been there from Massachusetts, New York and even far-away western states, and few of them have returned home empty-handed.

The exact records for the season are not yet available, but from the figures already at hand it is shown that at least 4000 deer and nearly 200 moose have been shipped through Bangor since open time began, heads have been sent as far as Germany.

The feeling of satisfaction at the great success of the just closed hunting season in Maine, is somewhat tempered by the long list of accidents, many of which proved fatal. When the last Legislature enacted a law providing a severe penalty for the shooting of a human being in the woods, even though such shooting should be accidental, it was supposed that fewer accidents would occur to mar the sport than in former years.

This has been so far from being true that the record of accidents this year is greater than ever before, and the deaths resulting from these accidents were twice as many this year as last. It is, therefore, concluded that the law which was passed because of the accidents which occurred last year is inadequate to meet the necessities of the situation.

It has been suggested that a law prohibiting the killing of doe deer would be a step in the right direction, the argument being that no man could mistake a deer with antlers for a man, and that, further, the hunter would be obliged to look more carefully lest he break the game law by shooting the wrong kind of deer, and would be much less likely to shoot by mistake at a human being. And just why such a law is not on the Maine statute books is rather astonishing. If deer are plentiful there is no reason for shooting does or fawns. If the deer are not plentiful, so much the more reason for protecting the does and fawns.

Nearly 100 accidental shootings have been reported in Maine this year, many of which were not serious. Thirteen of these accidents inflicted serious wounds and eight of them were fatal.

Many of the great game shots who have long since passed away would open their eyes, and their ears, too, were they to attend (in the spirit) one of the up-to-date tournaments of the present day. The constant recurrence of the words "pattern," "penetration," "velocities" and the like in the conversation of the shooters there gathered together, would sound to them as so much poppycock. A hundred years ago, yes, or even fifty years ago, a pipe's bowl or a thimble was good enough to measure shot or powder in, while paper was good enough for wadding. Such wads as the "express," "trap," "field," "blackedge," etc., were never thought of, and yet large bags of game were brought home by gunners without any recourse to market stalls to fill up the game bag. But there can be no question as to the improvement in modern guns and ammunition. Our shotguns of the present day are just as far ahead of those used by the above old-timers, as our big guns that wrought such havoc in Manila Bay are above the guns with which Nelson settled the Frenchman's hash in Trafalgar Bay. Nelson's guns were good enough to those days, and so were the old fowling pieces, some of which are treasured now as curiosities. But the present day needs something different, and sportsmen of the close of the nineteenth century are not satisfied with anything but the most perfect specimens of the gunsmith's art, announcements of which will be found on the back cover page of this issue.

Rabbit hunting with beagles is a favorite Eastern sport with many, and the opening of the season on rabbits is always eagerly looked forward to by hundreds of people who live in the city and who keep "beagle dogs" for the sole purpose of pursuing the wily cottontail two or three times every season. It requires very little skill to pot a rabbit with a shotgun as he hops along through the underbrush several yards ahead of the pursuing hounds, stopping every now and then to listen to the tongueing of those hounds as they unravel the twistings of his course along a snake fence or through tangled briar patches. A short, sharp whistle always brings Master Rabbit to a stand. Frequently he sits upon his haunches, listening and looking around to see what caused the strange noise. Boom goes the gun, and over tumbles poor bunny. Nothing fair about that; bunny never had any chance against an ounce and a quarter of shot. But take out a 22 calibre rifle with you, with "22 long" ammunition. Let your hounds start a rabbit. Listen to their music, and keep your eyes skinned for Molly Cottontail. There she comes, lopping along, perfectly at ease as to her ability to outwit her pursuers, and perfectly unconscious that she has other foes to reckon with. Choose your opportunity; whistle if you like; but if you get that rabbit with your little rifle you've done something to be proud of. As a rule, it takes more accurate work to successfully account for a rabbit with a 22 calibre rifle than to bag a duck or bear with the 30-30, or the older but still useful 45-90.

Deer Hunters' Camp in the Cascades, Oregon.

Striped bass fishing has been somewhat slow for a week past. The tide water at Point Reyes has tempted a number of fishermen to try for steelheads this week with fair success.

John P. Bahcock has been in the city for a week past. Mr. Bahcock's appearance on Sportsman's Row was hailed with pleasure by a host of friends among the shooters and anglers.

"Gigging"—that is, spearing fish at night by the aid of a flare or torch—although perhaps not to be classed correctly as a "sport," has a certain fascination about it that makes it popular, even if it is forbidden by law in some States. Wading down a stream or through a pond, everything around one dark as pitch outside the limits of the blaze of the torch, every now and then seeing a fish, sometimes getting it, oftentimes failing, has something about it that savors of the romantic, the unusual. That's what makes "gigging" attractive, and that almost elevates it to the plane of sport. Game fish as a rule can take care of themselves too well to permit of their being taken by this method of spearing. Trout and bass are too quick, and it is very seldom, indeed, that even the most expert spearsman can add such a fish to his bag. On the other hand, eels, the freebooters of the water, the robbers and destroyers of myriads of trout's eggs at spawning time, are comparatively easy marks, and much good is done to the cause of game preservation by the killing of eels by the "giggers." Hardmouths, too, pirates also, but sporting ones, are frequently foolish enough to fall victims to "giggers." In their case, too, no harm is done worth speaking about, for this fish cannot be held blameless for the loss of life among the small fry of the higher toned black bass and trout. All in all, the "gigger" seems to do more good than harm when he pursues his methods.

In a splendid story in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly the hero, one Santos, a diver, makes a vigorous defense of the shark.

"If de sharks dey don't were bere de tropics would be one big grave, 'n pes lance 'n death would kill everybody. De great God be knows dat 'n he put de little crab on de bottom of de sea to eat de little dead stuff 'n de big shark on de top of de sea to eat de big dead stuff, 'n he made de white shark 'n de blue shark for de dead animals, 'n de haskin' shark for de dead veg-tables, 'n all to keep de ocean 'n de air pure, same as huzzards on de shore do, 'n de law protects de buzzards on de shore do, is fair to de shark, 'n dese men tink dey know more den de great God 'n wants to kill 'em all, but dey don't can."

"I tel dat hug hunter, Mr. A., he don't stop to tiok dat here it's hot 'n tings have got to go quick 'n God puts big hungry sharks here dat am always hungry so dey can eat all day great big lumps; 'n a big whale who weighs eighty tons would make big trouble here if he don't was to eat up quick 'n two days, while up norf it's cool, 'n tings go slow 'n God he puts little dog-fish up dere 'n never a shark till man sends scows of veg-tables out in ocean 'n den he sends de haskin' shark to work for hees boss—man—'n man hollers 'man-eater' 'n kills de veg-table shark for makin' Atlantic City 'n other beaches healthy for dere children, instead of smell had."

Oct. 1. Last year the record was 3444 deer and 138 moose. Practically all the deer which are shipped out of the state go through Bangor, but these shipping records do not in any way indicate the total number of deer and moose killed in the state.

It is estimated that there have been 25,000 deer and 500 moose shot in Maine this year, including those shipped to out-of-the-State points, those legally killed and eaten in camp by sportsmen and at home by local hunters, and the illegally killed.

It is estimated that for every deer legally killed in the state the sum of $200 is expended, and for every moose $500. If these figures are accurate, and they have been made by men in a position to know, visiting sportsmen have left behind during the two and a half months of the open season not less than $800,000. The Hon. L. T. Carleton, chairman of the fish and game commission, has said that the fishing interests of the state pay three times as much as the game interests, so that the total revenue runs up into the millions.

There have been 59 deer and 3 moose taken through Bangor this year by women. The moose-slayers were: Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague, Boston; Mrs. S. W. Whilden, New York; Mrs. D. S. Adams, Manchester, N. H.

An interesting moose case was tried in the Bangor municipal court recently. Frank R. McDonald, of Cambridge, Mass., was charged with attempting to illegally transport a moose out of the State. Mr. McDonald had killed the moose three days before the season closed, but he neglected to appear and identify the carcass when it came to the Bangor station. He was found technically guilty of the offence, but as it was evident that he had intended no violation of the law, he was allowed to go by paying the costs.

A moose head, a trophy of a month's hunt in the northern Maine woods, was started a few weeks ago on a long trip to Cairo, Egypt, to its owner, Ernest G. Foote. This is the longest journey ever taken by any mounted game from Bangor, although several

Most sportsmen when they find a good shooting or fishing district are reticent concerning the possibilities in the way of fish and game of a favorite resort. A case of what harm may be done by widely circulating reports of a good game country, was given in a sportsman's journal a year or so ago. The correspondent of that paper had taken part in a hunt of large proportions down in the Mississippi bottoms, and found it an ideal spot for game, both bear and deer. He wrote up the hunt at length, and the next trip taken by his host the following season found the country full of camping parties who had read of the place and come to get their share of the promised land. It is now only a question of time as to when this "quiet spot" is utterly ruined for sporting purposes, for neither bear nor deer love to have camping parties as their bedfellows. This case was an isolated one, the story of the hunt and its surroundings being given for no other purpose than to make good reading for the paper's subscribers. But the result was the same, and no doubt the publicity given is amply regretted now. But the harm has been done, and those Mississippi bottoms will meet with the fate usual to all "happy hunting grounds" that once become well known.

Firearms of precision have been brought to such a pitch of excellence during the last few years that shooting on the wing now is much easier than it was a few years ago. Not alone have the guns and rifles themselves been improved, but the ammunition has also been made much more reliable and satisfactory. The best shells on the market are now cheap enough for everybody to get what he wants, while the primers are absolutely beyond reproach. Missfires and hang-fires are now a thing of rare occurrence, the proper ignition of the powder being practically a certainty. Smokeless powders, too, enable a man to get in a single barrel quickly and retrieve a miss with the first barrel, whereas in the old days of black powder a second barrel was almost an impossibility on a damp day—the comparatively heavy charges and consequent heavy recoil if light guns are used, or no shooter could stand a full day's target shooting, much less two or three days in succession, as in modern tournaments. Taking it all in all, there is no gun better adapted for all-round work, either at pigeon, targets or field work, than the 12-gauge. The modern 12-bore is fully equal in shooting capabilities to the old 10-bore, but perhaps the modern 10-bore has just as much advantage over the modern 12-bore as the old 10-bore guns had over their contemporary 12-bores. Hence 10-bores are still handicapped two yards.

Target shooting as carried on in America differs very widely from the sport as pursued in England, where target shooting is making many friends and has received quite an impetus since the international match last year. Here everything is done in a rush, each man apparently trying to see how many times he can fire his gun in a day, or a given number of hours. Unless he is shooting all the time he does not seem to be satisfied. In England it is different. There they take things easily, and the rapid-firing system has not taken a firm hold on the trap shooters of that country. The English allow the use of both barrels, and stand eighteen yards from the trap. The extra two yards, however, is not so much of a handicap as it would be over here, for the screens used as a rule in England are only long enough to properly hide the traps; thus the shooter "gets a good start" on his target. Over here, with the long high bulkheads necessary to shield both trappers and traps, a sharp quartering target or a low straightaway, gains a good start on the shooter, making the shooting correspondingly hard. At all meetings of the Inanimate Bird Shooting Association it used to be the rule that the five or six men facing the traps each fired at one target, when just as many little boys ran out and loaded up the trap again, this operation being repeated after each shot. The introduction of the rapid firing system into England is years. Prettier little weapons it would be impossible to find than some of the 22-calibres now on the market, the Remington for instance. For squirrels, rabbits and the like, they cannot be beaten, while for the man who likes to "shoot the head off a quail or a grouse" the 22 is indeed the gun for him. It is greatly to be regretted that the possession of a 22-rifle generally means that the owner will shoot at anything in sight "just for practice." Instead of firing at squirrels and such small game, let him go in for target practice, making the target as small as he likes, and putting it up at unknown distances, guessing at the range, etc. If he can make good records at this sort of work, he ought to be satisfied, and not use his rifle on harmless birds and animals "for the sake of practice." The indiscriminate slaughter of small birds does not belong to sportsmanship. The sportsman only kills game; and then only such game as he needs or can use.

The 30-40 is a very destructive weapon in the hands of a good marksman. With its flat trajectory and small report, it is possible to do extremely accurate work with the 30-40 up to 600 yards or over, once the range has been discovered. It is essentially the gun for an open country only. A sportsman who has spent the last few years in the Rockies on account of his health, says that he has found it the most suitable weapon so far as his experience goes. He cited instances of where he has killed odd goats, antelope and sheep at from 500 to 600 yards' range.

In one case he came upon four rams of the mountain sheep, all with fine heads of horns on them. From where he lay on a mountain side, concealed among some rocks, he was able to note their fine heads with the aid of his binoculars. From the position of the sheep, it was impossible for him to get any nearer to them without being seen, on account of the wide detour that would have had to be made and the lateness of the hour at which the sheep were first seen. Putting up his sights to about 500 yards, the estimated dis-best day for hunting, by the bye. On damp, still days the reek from black powder hung around the muzzle of the gun so long that often the shooter could not even note the small feathers floating in the air that tell of a kill. Only a dog's keen nose, or his own keen sight, disclosed the fact that a bird had fallen to his aim. With a breechloading gun and smokeless powders a covey of quail that gets up "scattering" stands a show of being decimated by the shooter, who stands still in his tracks and loads and fires at will at the birds that rise a few yards from him. With a repeating shotgun the havoc wrought is much more severe naturally and the number of wounded birds and cripples is a hundred fold more than of yore.

In the years of 1893, '94 and '95, when the Grand American Handicap was yet in its infancy, all the money in the purse went to the "three high guns." In 1896 a slight change was made, providing for a division of all surplus over and above the amount guaranteed to the "three high guns." This surplus was divided among a certain number of high guns, who were created in the ratio of two additional moneys for each ten entries over and above the number required to fill the guarantee.

Trap-shooting rules in America are practically based on all guns used being 12-bores. Those who use 10-bores are penalized two yards, while allowances are made if a shooter uses a 16-bore gun. In England the Inanimate Bird Shooting Association, the governing body of all inanimate target clubs, has ruled that it is impossible to differentiate between the different bores smaller than a 12, and no club grants any allowance to a competitor using a 16 or a 20-bore. In mentioning this point the London Field says that many shooters use a 16-bore for choice in club competitions. This may be so in England, but Americans don't fancy small bores when it comes down to shooting targets. There must be sufficient weight in the gun to counteract the bringing in long screens, and it may be that shooters will go in to sixteen yards instead of standing at eighteen yards.

The composition of the target is a great feature in the success of a tournament. If the targets are "hard breakers" the shooters get disgruntled and unhappy over the large percentage of "dusted targets." They kick at the management and at the maker of the target. Then if the targets are "good breakers" while the shooters are pleased, the club suffers by reason of excessive breakage in the barrels and in the traps, and then they kick at the manufacturers. Thus the manufacturer "gets it in the neck" whichever way the targets are made, for it is no easy matter to make a good breaker and a good transporter. The targets used in England have the reputation of being exceedingly tough and hard to break. Experts who have tried them say that they have to be centred with the full charge of shot to score a break; outside pellets are of no avail. Hard breaking targets are the best test of marksmanship, but they spoil averages; hence shooters don't like them.

Small calibre rifles are coming more and more into fashion. It was only a few years ago that nothing would do but the 45-90, or a 38-calibre if a man wanted something for small game. Nowadays the 30-30 is sought after by those who go out for large game; and deer and caribou trophies in quantity attest to its killing powers during the past season. The soft-nosed bullet does the trick. Making a small opening where it enters the animal, it quickly spreads out, mushrooms or breaks up, causing a terrific shock to the stricken animal, and sure death if hit in the body. The low trajectory, giving almost point blank range at anything up to 200 yards, adds greatly to its efficiency, while its lightness as compared with the larger calibres is something appreciable at the end of a long day's stalk up hill and down. In 22-calibres great things have been done by rifle manufacturers in the past few

The death of their mate scared the other three, but they did not know where the danger came from. In the end, to make a long story short, he got all four sheep without leaving the rocks he was concealed behind. Since that time, although he has had plenty of opportunities, he says he has never shot a mountain sheep, and expresses regret that he took advantage of the four old patriarchs, just for the sake of the four fine trophies he secured. Where more hunters like this one, there would be more game for those who will come after us.

Native Beliefs Regarding the Hair Marks on Horses and Cattle.

Secretary Jackson of the California State Agricultural Society has received from the Department of Agriculture, Madras, Hindostan, a most interesting document in the form of a bulletin giving the curious beliefs of the natives of that country regarding the hair marks on cattle and horses. Secretary Jackson has furnished the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN with a copy of the same, from which we extract the following:

Throughout India, but more especially in the Southern Presidency, among the native population, the value of a horse or ox principally depends on the existence and situation of certain hairmarks on the body of the animal. These hairmarks are formed by the changes in the direction in which the hair grows at certain places, and according to their shape are called a crown, ridge, or feather mark. The relative position of these marks is supposed to indicate that the animal will bring good or bad luck to the owner and his relatives.

There is a saying that "a man may face a rifle fire and may escape, but he can not avoid the luck, good or evil, foretold by hairmarks."

The purchaser first considers these marks, and, if they are propitious, the points of conformation, age, and soundness are of little importance. So much are the people influenced by these omens that they seldom keep an animal with unlucky marks, and would not allow their mares to be covered by a stallion having impropitious marks.

In the northern provinces owners and breeders are not so much guided by these superstitions, because by them the good and bad points of a horse are better understood. In purchasing cattle, less stress is laid on these marks than in the selection of a horse. In purchasing a cow, her hairmarks are not at all considered, a cow being held sacred and auspicious under all circumstances. The hairmarks on the body of a bullock born and bred in the house indicate neither good nor ill luck.

The following is a description of these marks and the significance attached to them:—

LUCKY MARKS.

1. Deobund.—Having control over evil spirits. Also termed Devuman or Devumani, said by Mohammedans to represent the Prophet's finger, and by Hindus to represent a temple bell.

This mark is a ridge, one to three inches long, situated between the throat and counter along the line of trachea. It is the most lucky mark a horse can possess. It is compared to the sun, and, therefore, when it is present, none of the evil stars can shine, and all unlucky omens are overruled.

2. Khanta (neck), or Khantaharanam (neck ornament), is a mark in shape like a lotus flower situated on the line of the trachea, one or two inches below the angle of the jaw. It is said to represent the moon, and to be next in power to Devumani. If it is placed on the level of the angle of the jaw, or on either side of the line of the trachea, it is called "Galkhod" or "Mannaipudi" (compressor of the neck), and is then an unlucky mark.

3. Masthak (head).—Two crowns on the poll at either side. These marks should be opposite each other. If not opposite, they are called "Theescut," and are then considered unlucky. It is also unlucky if one mark only is present. By some Masthak is considered a neutral mark.

4. Torun (anklet), Chimta.—Two crowns on the forehead, situated horizontally above the inner canthus. By some this is considered a neutral and by others an unlucky mark.

5. Panchkallian (five buds).—A horse of any color, except white or gray, having a white mark on the face (star race snip or blaze), and also four white legs or pasterns, is held to be very lucky.

6. White, dun, gray, piebald, and skewbald are considered lucky, and much sought after by natives.

UNLUCKY MARKS.

1. Herdavel, or Herda.—A crown or an irregular-shaped mark, on the counter, near or upon the sternum. This is considered the most unlucky mark, and to indicate that the owner of the animal will die a sudden death.

2. Ausoodhal (weeping) is a crown on the forehead, situated below the line of the inner canthus. If this mark is very low down, it is called "Gadha Bhowari" (donkey mark).

3. Beherachad (breaker of water-pots), or Chattri (umbrella).—Two crowns on the forehead, situated longitudinally one above the other; if one is inclined to one side, it is called Behra Fore. This mark is unlucky; also, if there are three crowns in form of a triangle or three in a line. Chulla (fire-place), or three or more crowns in a row; it is a sign of bad luck. A double row of crowns is called Sera (bridegroom), and indicates that the owner will always be a bridegroom; if he is a bachelor, he will soon be married, and, if a married man, he will soon lose his wife, and marry again.

4. Gome (centipede) is a small crown placed under the chest about the girth. This is a very unlucky mark.

5. Gungapet is a large crown on the abdomen between the sternum and the sheath.

6. Sapeen (snake).—When there is a crown on one side of the neck, and none on the opposite side, or two on one side and one on the other, the mark is known as Sapeen, and is considered most unlucky. If there are two on both sides, it is called Thathri, and is a neutral mark.

If there is one on both sides, it is termed Doa Bago, and is a neutral mark.

7. Peth Sapeen, or Masthencode, is a crown on the withers.

8. Janaza (coffin).—This term is applied when the Masthak marks are present, and from them on either side there are two ridges, one to three inches long, running down the neck.

If there is a ridge on one side only, it is termed akhaza. Both are very unlucky marks.

9. Theescut is the term applied when the Masthak marks are not opposite each other, and is by some considered a neutral mark.

10. Galkhod or Mannaipudi.—When the Khantaharanam mark is situated at the angle of the neck, or at either side of the trachea, it is called Galkhod or Mannaipudi.

11. Badi (fetter).—A ridge of hair directed upwards on one or both forearms on the outer side is said to indicate that the owner of the animal will be sent to jail.

If the hair is directed downwards, it is a neutral mark.

12. Khortagad (pig driver), or Khila Gad, is a ridge of hair directed downwards, on one or both hind legs, below the locks. It is said that no horse in the stable will be sold so long as the horse with these marks is kept.

If the hair is directed upwards, it is termed Kboota Ukhad, or Khila Upar, and is a neutral mark.

13. Thanni (teat).—Teat-like projections on the sheath of the male are considered unlucky.

NEUTRAL MARKS.

1. Raj Bhamro (royal mark), or Peishanikabhowra.—A single crown on the forehead above the line of the inner canthus.

2. Chathika-Chowra (counter marks).—Two ridges, some inches long on either side of the counter. These should be identical in shape or size; if not, they are considered unlucky marks.

3. Kookanir.—Two feather marks, one on each flank.

4. Petkabownra.—Two crowns on the abdomen, behind umbilicus, on either side of the median line. The absence of these above four marks is considered unlucky. It is essential that a horse should possess these four marks, and also masthak marks.

5. Kharta-Ukhad.—A ridge on hind legs below hocks, with the hair directed upwards.

LUCKY MARKS.

1. Tamani Suli.—A ridge of hair along the middle line of the back about its center. "Tamani" means a herd, and this mark indicates that the purchaser will acquire a large number of cattle.

2. Irattai-Kavam consists of two ridges of hair, one on each side of the brisket. A single hairmark on one side of the brisket (Ottai-kavam) is most unlucky, and forebodes the loss of all other cattle in the house, and also the death of the purchaser.

3. Bhashicam Suli is a crown on the forehead above the line of the eyes. "Bhashicam" is the name of the wreath worn by bride and bridegroom during the marriage ceremony. If the purchaser be a bachelor or widower, this mark indicates that he will marry soon. If the purchaser be a married man, he will either have the misfortune to lose his wife and marry again, or the good fortune to obtain two wives.

4. Gopura Suli.—A crown upon, in front of, or immediately behind the hump. Considered a very lucky mark.

5. Nir Suli is a crown situated on the middle line of the back just opposite to the opening of the urethra. Regarding this the saying is that "the family will either be reduced to ashes or swell like a river." The hairmark is thus of doubtful signification. An intending purchaser, rather than incur the risk of evil consequences, will avoid the purchase. The ryots say that if a little earth be taken and rubbed on this hairmark, the bullock will void urine.

6. Erupuran (ascending centipede).—A ridge of hair on the hindquarters curving up to the back is a sign of coming prosperity. If the ridge does not curve upwards to the back, it is called Irangupuran (descending centipede), and indicates adversity to the purchaser.

7. Lakshumi Suli is a hairmark situated on one side of the neck at a distance from the dew lap. Lakshumi is the goddess of fortune. This is considered to be the most lucky hairmark, but is rarely met with. A bullock with such a mark is highly esteemed, and fetches a long price.

UNLUCKY MARKS.

1. Mukkanti Suli, or Agni Suli.—Three crowns on the forehead, arranged in form of a triangle, said to represent the three eyes of Siva, of which the one in the forehead will, if opened, burn up all things within the range of vision.

This mark forebodes ruin to the purchaser.

2. Kudai-mel-kudai.—Two crowns, one over the other, on the forehead, predict disaster after disaster.

3. Ottai-kavam.—A single hairmark on one side of the brisket close to the middle line forebodes loss of all other cattle in the house, and the death of the purchaser.

4. Vilangu Suli (fettlers).—Hairmarks on the fetlocks of either pair of legs indicate that the purchaser will soon be in gaol.

5. Padai Suli.—Two ridges of hair on the back on either side of the middle line. Indicates that the purchaser will soon need a coffin.

6. Irangupuran (descending centipede).—A ridge of hair on the hind quarters not curving upwards to the back indicates adversity.

7. Nagappadam.—A ridge of hair on the haunch spreading out at one end like the hood of a cobra. If the direction of the hood is upwards, it is termed Munnagam; and if downwards, Pinnagam.

8. Tattu Suli (obstacle).—A crown situated on the back between the points of the hips. Indicates that tail near the root, sometimes extending as ridge over the back.

OTHER SUPERSTITIONS REGARDING CATTLE.

A bullock whose tail has the root of the tuft of hair situated above the hock is said to have "Eruval," and to bring ill luck. A cow having "Eruval" is not objected to.

A bullock having white hair, skin, horns, and hoof, is considered of weak constitution, and not to be purchased.

A black bullock is generally considered a rogue. If not a rogue, he is considered of great value according to the saying:—

"A black bullock is but the fourth of a bull, but if he be guileless he is a bullock and a quarter."

A bullock with numerous small spots over the body "like a deer" is considered very lucky.

The form of the horns is supposed to indicate many things. The different forms of horns go by different names; for instance, Madakkombu means horns bent backwards. This is a good sign in a cow. The saying is:—

"Let any man who does not know how to select a cow purchase one with horns curved backwards."

Straight horns, Silai, are liked. Horns pointed forwards, Kopada, indicate spirit. Twisted horns, Churuttai, are considered good. Horns which are hollow, and present white patches, looking as if they were rotten, "Kollikkombu," are considered very disastrous. Horns with white tops, Punkombu, are also bad.

If a cow, at the time of purchase, voids urine, it is considered a very good omen; but if she passes dung it is a bad omen. The reverse is the case with a bullock.

A bullock which fails to cut the fourth pair of permanent incisors is called Arukatti-madu, and is considered lucky; that is, "one who purchases a bullock with only six permanent incisors will become rich enough to keep an elephant."

A bullock which cuts only seven permanent incisors is unlucky to the owner. The saying is that one who purchases such a bullock should have his coffin ready.

The production and exportation of mules is quite an important industry in the San Joaquin valley. Mule buyers have been numerous this season. One from Missouri, who has been doing business in the valley for three months, purchased and shipped to his State 3000 head. Some of them were destined for coal mines in Pennsylvania and some for Canada. The prices paid ranged from $60 to $100. Last Thursday a shipment of five carloads of these animals was made from Merced over the Santa Fe road. Notwithstanding the large number of mules shipped out of the valley within the past few months there are large numbers remaining. At present prices the raising of mules would seem to be a profitable industry.—Merced Express.

Judge Morrow of the U. S. Circuit Court, has rendered a decision in which he sustains the tax on sheep as imposed by the counties of Sierra and Plumas. An effort was made during the last Legislature to pass a law regulating the matter, and the bill passed the Assembly but was killed in the Senate.

Beet pulp has this peculiar feature—it never spoils. It may smell spoiled when hauled from the factory, but that condition is only seeming. And the longer it is kept the better the stock like it. After fermentation, and when apparently perfectly worthless, stock will eat it with the greatest relish.

The Club also reserves the right to refuse the entries of any person, or the transfer of any entry, and without notice.

THIS RACE COURSE (MONTGOMERY PARK) is, without a doubt, one of the best in America to winter and train the thoroughbred, furnishing first-class and most comfortable quarters for both man and horse FREE. On this track the majority of the good two-year-olds of the West each season are developed. Entry Blanks or any information on application will be promptly furnished by the Secretary.

Cure in All Cases.

Sent Absolutely Free on Receipt of Postal.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. WELLS, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-size bottle."

We want to send to every sufferer a trial treatment of Asthmalene, similar to the one that cured Mr. Wells. We'll send it by mail POSTPAID, ABSOLUTELY FREE OF CHARGE, to any sufferer who will write for it, even on a postal. Never mind, though you are despairing, however bad your case, Asthmalene will relieve and cure. The worse your case, the more glad we are to send it. Do not delay. Write at once, addressing DR. TAFT BROS.' MEDICINE CO., 79 East 130th St., N.Y. City. Sold by all Druggists.

OCCIDENT STAKE OF 1904. TROTting STAKE FOR FOALS OF 1901.

To be Trotted at the California State Fair of 1904. Entries to Close January 1, 1902 with GEO. W. JACKSON, Secretary, at the office in Sacramento.

ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS ENTRANCE, of which $10 must accompany nomination; $15 to be paid January 1, 1903, $25 to be paid January 1, 1904, and $50 thirty days before the race. The Occident Cup, of the value of $400, to be added by the Society. Mile heats, three in five, to harness. First colt to receive cup and six tenths; second colt, three tenths; and third colt one tenth of the stakes. Five to enter, three to start; otherwise N. T. A. Rules govern. Nominators are not held for full amount of entrance in case goes wrong; only forfeit payments made, which relieves you from further responsibility, and declares entry out.

NOTE—This Stake is growing in value each year. In 1898 it was worth $3255; in 1899, $3775; in 1900, $3230; in 1901, $3295. The Occident Stake of 1902 received 95 entries, by far the largest to that date in the history of the stake, and in 1903 this stake received 98 entries, and should be the richest stake ever trotted for on this Coast, and with only the 1st and 2nd payments made to date is now worth $2220, the 3d and 4th payments not yet due. The stake for 1904 should receive a larger entry and be very valuable. Every breeder should enter in it.

By entering your Colt in this Stake it will enhance its value in case you desire to sell. REMEMBER THE DATE OF CLOSING IS JANUARY 1, 1902.

A CHANCE AT $6000 FOR $18

IN THE

Pacific Breeders Futurity Stakes

$6000 Guaranteed

A FEW SUBSTITUTIONS.

A few of the original nominators of Pacific Breeders Futurity Stakes ($6000 guaranteed) for foals of 1901 have advised us that, because of barrenness of the mare or death of the foal, they wish to dispose of their entries. The opportunity therefore presents itself to secure a $6000 engagement for foals of this season. If you own one or more whose dams you neglected to name when entries closed Sept. 1, 1900, you can now secure representation in this stake, and thus add materially to the value of your foals. The cost is but $18—$3 for the nomination, $5 for the January payment, 1901, and $10 for the January payment, 1902.

NOTHING MORE TO PAY BEFORE 1903

$2000 for Three-Year-Old Trotters.

200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Three-Year-Old Trot.

1250 for Two-Year-Old Trotters.

200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Two-Year-Old Trot.

100 to Owner of Stallion, Sire of Winner of Three-Year-Old Trot when mare was bred.

$1000 for Three-Year-Old Pacers.

200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Three-Year-Old Pace.

750 for Two-Year-Old Pacers.

200 for Nominator of Dam of Winner of Two-Year-Old Pace.

100 to Owner of Stallion, Sire of Winner of Three-Year-Old Pace when mare was bred.

The Only Opportunity that will be presented to you to secure so rich an engagement at so nominal a cost.

Remittance of $18, with color, sex and breeding of the foal, on or before January 1st next, is all that is required to add thousands of dollars to the earning capacity of your foal of this season. The few substitutions to be disposed of will be awarded in the order in which remittances are received. Prompt attention will secure for you this rich engagement.
